FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitobe Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

Railroads to be Compelled to Put in Side Tracks.

St. Paul Globe.

Attorney General Clapp has filed an important opinion with the railroad commissioners, having reference to the liability of a railroad company building side tracks within the limit of its right of way. The opinion is called for by a complaint of J. R. Webb, of Olmstead County, against the Chicago & Northwestern Railway company. The attorney general says:

This complaint involves the question of whether a railroad company can be compelled to build a side track within the limits of its right of way, to serve the business of an elevator placed adjacent to its right of way, and I have the honor to advise you, that, in my opinion, where the warehouse is erected upon land adjoining the right of way of the railroad, and its business can be served by a side track within the limits of the right of way of such company, the company can be compelled to construct such a side track. This, of course, involves the supposition that the elevator is actually erected, and that the demands for shipping facilities are real, and not problematical. In the case unde consideration. I understand Mr. Webb has a warehouse which is already erected, and situate adjacent to the right of way of the company.

I also understand that numerous other instances exist where the warehouse or elevator is not yet constructed, but it is desired to construct one when the proper facilities for shipping can be secured. As I am of the opinion that the warehouse and elevator, and the demand for shipping facilities, must be an existing fact before the company can be compelled to place its track, I would suggest that should your board direct an action to be brought, that it be brought in the case of the complaint of Mr. Webb, as by so doing the question of whether the company can be compelled to build said track, can be definitely determined by the court before parties interested incur the expense of erecting elevators.

Realizing that proceedings of this character are necessarily attended with vexatious delay, notwithstanding the efforts to expedite such proceedings, I prepared a bill for the legislature of 1887 which provided a cheap plan and simple procedure by which parties could by condemnation proceedings acquire the right to place elevators upon the right of way of railroad companies. All constitutional objections were met by making full and ample provisions for the appointment of appraisers to appraise the damage, and an appeal to the court by either party if desired. Under the bill in question any parties desiring to erect elevators could have commenced condemnation proceedings, giving the necessary bonds, and at once proceed with the construction of their elevators; and it might not be amiss to state that your honorable board pressed the adoption of such a law before the legislature of 1887 and 1889, but for some reason the bill in both instances failed to become a law. I recall this matter as a suggestion that neither your honorable board nor myself are responsible for the existing condition of this subject.

Duluth & Winnipeg.

Duluth Tribune: Contractor M. H. Foley was in the city yesterday and arrangements were made with Stone & Ordean to furnish food supplies for the men employed in extending the Duluth & Winnipeg to the Mississippi River. J. P. Simms, of the Itasca Lumber company, was also in the city and has made arrangements to ship the goods to Aitken from which point he will carry them up the Mississippi River to the point where the road will strike the river in one of the Lumber company's boats. The contract has been let to about fifteen sub-contractors who have the job of grading and constructing the road in small contracts of from a mile to six miles. These men will push the work with all dispatch and expect to have it in condition to run trains over by December first as far as the Mississippi River. It is expected that about 2,000 men will be at work within a week. Some of the small contracts were let Saturday, but most of them were parceled out Monday. The road will be completed in time to allow of the transportation of the supplies for loggers by that route and will be of great advantage to Duluth merchants who will secure most of the outfitting which was formerly done from Minneapolis over the Northern Pacific via Brainerd and Aitken.

Prison Mirror: No, thank you, we do not want any of Dr. Brown-Sequard's rejuvenator at present. Try it on some of our delinquent subscribers, and if it gives them sufficient energy to drop their dollars in the slot within one year from date, we shall feel confirmed of its good qualities, and try some of it on our local reporter.

Startling Crop Reports.

Orange Judd Farmer.

A long cablegram from Europe yesterday (Aug. 26) was so unexpected and striking, that it was at first thought to be bogus—a trick of speculators to bull the market. But as the day wore on it received so much credence that prices worked up about 1½@2 cents a bushel, and if fully confirmed we shall look for a larger advance in wheat. This will have a favorable effect upon corn, even if the best weather and absence of frost allows the perfect filling out and maturing of the present crop. The great Annual Statistical Grain Congress of Europe is now in session at Vienna, and though its work is not completed, a forecast of its estimates, as telegraphed, makes out in the wheat yield, as compared with the average for five years past, and 231,742,000 bushels less than last year's crop. This deficiency, if as large as reported, can be fully supplied from nowhere else but America, and all we can spare will be called for at good figures. Our stock of last year's small crop was well cleaned up. With the free receipts of winter wheat the total visible supply east of the Rocky Mountains, Canada included, on Saturday, July 24th, in elevators and afloat, was only 14,195,348 bushels, or a little more than half as much as one year ago; that is 27,171,702 bushels on Aug. 25th, 1888. Our great competitor, India, has only 243,000,000 against 266,000,000 bushels last year, and an average of 254,000,000 bushels for five years past. Australia's crop is also short. No reports were cabled for Turkey, Greece, Spain and Portugal for this year's yield. With these exceptions

222,622,000 BUSHELS DEFICIENCY

Delightful Entertainment.

Tomah Journal: The Stewart concert company sang to a fair-sized audience Thursday evening, and as always, gave a delightful entertainment. The accompanist on the organ showed remarkable skill in the instrumental solos with which he favored the audience. The company will always be welcomed whenever they come this way.

The Boys are Marching.

Minneapolis Journal: Nearly five thousand members of the Grand Army of the Republic died last year. That number will increase from year to year for some time to come, and very rapidly while the order maintains its numbers as well as it does now by new enrollments.

This is a fact that should be borne in mind in every consideration of the pension question. The old "boys" will soon all be gone, and their noble, self-sacrificing stout-hearted wives, too. The time will come all too soon when the nation will no longer be able to show its gratitude toward the veterans of the war by providing with loving liberality for their necessities.

And so, while we may not all approve of all the plans the Grand Army makes for the distribution of pension funds—such a plan, for instance, being objectionable as makes practically no distinction between a three months mercenary and a four years patriot—yet no one who is capable of rightly appreciating the services the old soldiers have rendered can ever object to their demands, simply on the ground of expense, so long as the public bounties are fairly awarded.

What Might Have Been.

Minneapolis Journal: Ex-Gov. McGill tells the Duluth Tribune that if he had anything to say about it Col. Colville would be retained as register of the Duluth land office as long as he wanted the office. Colville is a Democrat, but the ex-Governor thinks that the claims of the man who led the 1st Minnesota at Gettysburg upon the government are considerably larger than those of any mere partisan politician. The ex-Governor is exactly right, and Col. Colville is pretty sure of holding his place. At any rate it will be uncomfortable for the man who supplants him, especially if he was not a soldier.

But this point the ex-Governor makes is suggestive of the greater embarrassment that might exist now in providing places for partisans, if the late administration had been more friendly to the old soldiers and had filled more offices with that kind of office-holders.

THE SUGAR TRUST.

The Western Rural.

We are greatly encouraged by the letters we receive pledging the co-operation of the writers in our plan or in any feasible plan to crush the sugar trust. As we have before said it requires a considerable determination to say: We will do without sugar. But to say it is to declare our independence, and for the sake of liberty and right, men have made sacrifices compared to which giving up the use of sugar is nothing but play. Things worth having do not often come to us without an effort on our part. Somebody must step to the front and remain in the heat of the battle, or the world would lose all that is worth having. It is not a pleasant thing to lead in revolts against the oppression of wrong, but men have been compelled to lead in such revolts in every land and in every age. It was not a pleasant undertaking when our forefathers set out to fight for their own independence and that of their posterity. But either they must do that or see themselves and their children slaves; and saying one to another, "We must hang together or we shall hang separately," they proceed to establish civil and religious liberty in the name of the American Republic.

And "we must hang together or hang separately," figuratively speaking. The trusts—than which there is no meaner one than the sugar trust—are determined to rob us to death, and they will do it unless we protect ourselves. Of course we all understand that stringent legislation must be procured to throttle these thieving enterprises, but to get that we must be willing to hang together and make some sacrifice, and until we do get it, justice to ourselves demands that we should refuse to use the product that a trust is using to rob us. Let the press of the country take this matter up and urge the people to do without sugar for a while, and we farmers, as The Rural has before suggested, should proceed to do what we can towards producing our own sweets.

Maple Lakers.

Grand Forks Herald.

Well! Yes, we've all come back
And we had just a Higham time;
We would fish, and sail and tack
And bathing there was just sublime.

Did we have a jolly crowd?
Well! I should say that we just had;
And nary wind, or storm nor cloud
To make our camp life bad.

We had an old Cat-a-ma-ran,
To sail in round the lake;
And with sails spread like a fan
With saftey the whole crowd 'twould take.

Was Cole along? Well! you just wait
And I'll tell you what he did.
Caught lots of perch without a bait
And talked a man to death named Sid.

Yes, we all voted Maple Lake
To be the prettiest place
For it will cure every ache
Heir to the human race.

'Twas two o'clock one sultry night
While everything was still,
That Higham struck a candle light
To wander round at will.

Then thinking that we all were dry,
Excepting Rose—Cole's daughter.
Concluded he would meekly try
And pass us all the water.

They say that bed bugs do not bite.
Not if they are made of leather,
But they look awful bad at night
In clusters thick together.

Who would think while camping out
All sleeping in the balmy air,
One would up and roam about
Collecting every sleepers fare.

Who were there? Well! let me see,
If I can get them down in rhyme.
There were Mrs. J. and me
Also Mr. and Mrs. Higham.

Then came Mr. and Mrs. Lay.
The Bacons next both man and wife,
And John L. Cole there every day
Refused to take on "natural life."

While Mrs. Cole expressed surprise
And Rose and Ruth and Arthur too,
Appeared to open wide their eyes
To see him mum the whole week through.

The Herrimans there numbered just two,
Fred and his mother, Miss Jones also,
With Charlie March and Miss McGrew,
And Mrs. O'Neil, yes! all did go.

Then there was Hannah, she crept out
And cut the strings to cow-bells tied,
And though we pulled and jerked about
No sound would come how'er hard we tried.

We had dogs and guns, and lots to eat,
And little boats in which to row,
And all then felt their joy complete
And resolved again next year to go.

A circus tent? well, no! not quite,
Though some permorming there was done
When Cole and Higham both at night
Kept all awake with noisy fun.

Twenty there were as you can see
By counting all I've mentioned here,
And as for pleasure we agree
The very best we've had this year.

The Happiest Farmer.

Fulda Republican: It may seem strange to the average Northwestern farmer, but the happiest looking and most contented one we have seen in many a day, recently said that he owned eighty acres of land and wanted no more, was out of debt, gaining a little every year, living comfortably, had all the land he could possibly till well, and was satisfied that he got more pounds and bushels from his eighty than came from the average section.

Inform Yourselves.

Fairmont News: The legislature proposed an amendment to our state constitution last winter to be voted on in 1890, providing that the minds of five-sixths of the jurors concurring shall be the verdict in a civil action after six hours failure to find a unanimous verdict. Our object in calling attention to this now is that full discussion and deliberate action may be had. It proposes to overturn one of the oldest landmarks of our Anglo Saxon civilization and the people will do well to post themselves.

G. A. R. Commanders.

St. Paul News.

The Grand Army of the Republic was organized Nov. 20th, 1866, at Indianapolis, Gen. Stephen A. Hurlburt being chosen commander-in-chief. The next encampment was held in 1868 at Philadelphia, Gen. Logan being elected commander-in-chief and re-elected in 1869 at Cincinnati, and in 1870 at Washington. Gen. Burnside was next chosen, in 1871 at Boston, and again in 1872, at Cleveland. In 1873, at New Haven, Gen. Charles Devens, Jr., was elected, and at Harrisburg in 1874 re-elected. At Chicago in 1875, Gen. John F. Hartranft was elected, and again in 1876, at Philadelphia. At Providence, R. I., in 1877, and Springfield, Mass., 1878, Gen. John C. Robinson was elected. At Albany, in 1879, Rev. William Earnshaw, of Ohio, was chosen. At Dayton, O., in 1880, Gen. Louis Wagner was elected. In 1881 the encampment was held at Indianapolis again, George S. Merrill, of Massachusetts, being chosen. In 1882, at Baltimore, Paul Vandervoort, of Nebraska, was chosen. In 1883, at Denver, Col. R. B. Heath, of Massachusetts. In 1884, at Minneapolis, John S. Kountz of Toledo, O., was elected. At Portland, Me., in 1885, Gen. S. S. Burdett, of Washington, was chosen. Gen. Lucius Fairchild was elected in 1886 at San Francisco, and Gen. John P. Rea, of Minneapolis, was chosen at St. Louis in 1887. In 1888, at Columbus, O., Maj. William Warner, of Kansas City, was chosen, and in 1889 Gen. R. A. Alger at Milwaukee.

When the encampment was held at Chicago, in 1875, seventy-eight delegates were present, representing fourteen departments. The first general camp, to which members who were not delegates were invited, was at Denver, in 1883, and the second at Minneapolis, in 1884. The organization had in 1883 only 145,932 members, but after the general camp of that year it grew rapidly, and the total membership at this time, as reported at Milwaukee, is 382,598, a gain of 324020 in ten years, the membership in 1879 being 35,961. The gain for the past year was 15,824. There are forty-two departments, covering every state and territory and 6,711 posts. The deaths for the year ending in June last were 4,696.

With the exception of Gen. Hurlburt, Gen. Logan and Gen. Burnside, who were the first three, all the commanders-in-chief are living.

Give a Fellow a Show.

The Prison Merrior.

The tendency of the press seems to be to retard rather than promote the welfare of an ex-convict, or in other words his reformation. The daily papers frequently contain accounts of where the executive has exercised his prerogative by granting clemency to some unfortunate confined within the walls of a prison, through some violation of our laws. These accounts are written up as sensational items; headed in large type for the purpose of attracting especial attention to the fact; setting forth the action of the executive, etc. If they stopped there it would not be quite so bad, but no, they go on and detail all the circumstances of the affair in full; the same as was brought out at the time of the commission of the crime and again at the trial, then add some spicy items—opinions of others—and end by criticizing the action of the executive, either pro or con.

How much better would it have been, to omit the publication entirely or if necessary, publish only the mere fact of the executive's action. No one is benefited by a rehash of the circumstances surrounding the act committed, and surely the discharged man is injured to a very great extent. Many of these men are here for their first offence and while thus confined are led to see the evil attended upon a career of crime and earnestly desire to reform and lead a better life in the future. Friends come forward and assist them to obtain their release, believing that if given a chance they will reform. They no sooner pass out the gate than they see some paper containing the entire account, as shown above, of their discharge, former life—biography you might call it—and so they are again brought into prominence and their chances of gaining employment are lessened. I am speaking of those who are confined under their own name and not an alias for to the latter it matters not so much. Those who are thus released and are well known in the immediate world in which they formerly lived are the ones who are thus injured. Think how much their mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters have suffered already, through their evil ways, and then say if you think it right to again inflict them with the pain of a remembrance of the past. Give us all a chance and in the name of all that is good and just refrain from this eternally bringing up the past; encourage us in the bright prospects for the future.

FINE WATCH REPAIRING A SPECIALTY.

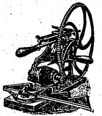
C. H. SAAKE,
ROBERT STREET CROOKSTON.

A Word to the "Wise Farmer."



Are Your Crops Short This Season?

Then there is the greater reason why you should save every dollar possible. You will not be practicing wisdom nor economy if you fail to procure one of the "BEST" Sickle Grinders. These grinders do not draw the temper, are simple, durable and a decided success. The stone does not gum up or become glazed, but is always sharp. Its cutting qualities are excelled only by the "diamond. If you have any old sickles that you cannot sharpen satisfactorily, try my grinder, and after seeing how easily you can make it as good as new, you will readily see how you can save a number of dollars by purchasing one. It is not necessary for me to tell you of the trouble you always have in grinding your sickles on a grindstone—you know all about it. With this grinder (after the knives are once adapted to the tone) you can sharpen a sickle in a very short time; you can also grind out the nicks so they will cut as well as the unbroken edge. The stone is pure curandron (not emery) and water does not affect it; it is porous and will absorb water like a sponge. A straight stone is furnished as an extra, with which you can grind plow points, axes, butcher knives, or, in fact, anything that needs sharpening. I will guarantee perfect satisfaction in every case.

JOHN MCLEAN.

Ed. Walsh says he wishes the Canadian Government would let him know how soon it can give up that watch. He has been waiting a summons to go down ever since he came back a week ago Saturday night but up to Monday night he had not received it. Says he guesses they like h'American watches down there.

John Power who last spring went to Jefferson City, Montana, returned on Sunday night having visited all of the chief cities in the west, and seen nearly all of the Crookston contingent out there. He reports "our boys" all doing well in that country, all in excellent health and good spirits. He thinks he is satisfied with Polk County however.

Will Clements has bought out F. E. Hertz & Co., and on Monday took possession of the old stand. Will says now that the new road is coming and he will have a chance to ship his fruits direct from California he can see a big future for Crookston and is now ready to catch on to the boom while there is time. He was passing around the cigars on Monday to his numerous friends.

Soren Johnson returned from Butte, Montana, last week having sold his gallery there. The deal includes his gallery, here also and Mr. Johnson intends to take a rest from the photograph business awhile. His western experience serves to make him more satisfied with Polk County and its prospects. Just now the good people of Butte are anxious about their water supply, being unable to get good water.

Did you see that blank expression come over the handsome countenance of Fontaine & Anglim's delivery clerk last week? It was when he was about to deliver a case of Max' best and the aforesaid case "took a header and down she went" making a complete mash of the whole business. Blankety, blank, blank, blank was all that George could remark as he saw $3.50 pass from his wages to profit and loss—principally loss. Says this is the first mash he has made since he has been in business in this city.

Boston Herald, Sept. 11: The Star Course entertainment at Tremont Temple last evening was extremely interesting, and was enjoyed throughout by the immense audience of patrons. The program was contributed by the National Swedish Ladies Concert Company, a double quartette of good voices, and the several selections of Swedish music were finely sung. The company appears in the national costume and presents a very picturesque appearance.

Amusements.

Evening Dispatch, Moline, Ill., April 26.

The largest audience which has assembled in the Wagner Opera House this season greeted the Swedish Octette last evening. The programme, as on their previous appearance in this city, consisted of fourteen numbers, and, each number being encored, made a grand total of twenty-eight—certainly a heaped-up measure for one night's diversion. But the singers came up every time with fresh, dimpled smiles (smiles far sweeter than the stereotyped distortions so common on the American stage), and when the audience showered them repeatedly with flowers as a further reward, they began to feel that they were being given an ovation in earnest. It was not necessary for one to understand the language to appreciate the music, which was in every instance, and especially in the soprano solos, most touching. It seemed as natural for them to furnish melody as for a bird to fly or a bee to buzz.

Opera House, Crookston, Sept. 19th.

On Saturday last coroner Shepard was summoned to McIntosh to hold an inquest upon the body of one Ole Hofto whose dead body was found in a well on his place on Friday afternoon. He had been to McIntosh, about one and one half miles away, on Friday morning and it is supposed that while engaged in watering his horses upon his return he fell into the well. The coroner summoned a jury and subpoenaed his witnesses among them Dr. McEachran, of McIntosh, who had attended the man after the accident and then adjourned the case till Tuesday.

H. C. Grey, the veteran Massachusetts editor, who was in the city a few days last week left for the west on Friday morning. Before going he called again at THE JOURNAL office, after having taken a trip about the county and in parting said: "You have indeed a great country and I believe in a few years you will be selling land here at figures that you now would consider enormous, for you have got one of the best soils on earth and your climate is hard to beat."

To-night our citizens will have an opportunity to say what we will give to establish a college in Crookston. If no better plan is suggested would it not be well to devote $10,000 or $,15000 of the $50,000 bonds that the city can issue for improvements? Let everybody turn out to the meeting to-night ready with some suggestions. The benefits of such institutions among us are too obvious to need extended comment and Crookston now has an opportunity to secure one such as she may not have again soon. The city of Grand Forks is making great efforts to secure this institution and if our people want it they will have to be on the alert and act harmoniously. Don't fail to be at the city hall to-night and look into this matter. It is a subject worthy of earnest consideration.

H. G. Palmer and wife, of Waterloo, Iowa, was in the city last week renewing old acquantenance. Mrs. Palmer and her daughter-in-law Mrs. Raymond Palmer left for their new home in Tacoma on Tuesday evening, where "Ray" is associated in business with Jos. Lawrence. H. G. will remain until affairs on his Warren farm are adjusted when he will also go to take a hand in the business.

He's All Right Yet.

E. F. Smith, of Spokane Falls, showed his good judgment by sending an order for a carload of Crookston Creamery butter. Mr. Smith has fifty cows of his own and he must be having a good trade to be obliged to thus supplement his dairy, and he also seems to know where to get the real genuine article: Ed. has lived here and knows right well where good butter grows.

The Noss Family.

It is not often that so much music is combined in one family group as was presented at the opera house on Thursday evening to a delighted audience of our music loving people. It is easier to mention the instruments that they can't play on than otherwise but if there is such a thing in existence we do not readily recall its name. From the rising of the curtain till the going down thereof the audience were on the broad grin over the musical oddities and comicalities presented, or listening with wrapt attention to the finest musical treat thas has been presented in many a day. They are all good—everyone, but the little twelve-year-old Bertha is a veritable musical prodigy and a clever little actress withal. Her presence upon the stage was greeted with rapturous applause and she is deserving of it. While she performed wonders for one so young her bearing was very quiet and unaffected showing none of the precociousness which infantile actresses are wont to assume. If she is not allowed to over-work she will make her mark high on the roll of celebrated musicians. We are told that the Noss family may come this way again and should they do so we think we can assure them a hearty welcome by our people.

Duluth News: The Duluth & Winnipeg railroad is attracting much attention from those who know of the vastness of the resources of Northern Minnesota. The Minneapolis Lumberman says that of the most important results calculated to follow the building of railroads in the northern part of Minnesota will be the development of the hardwood lumber interest, which has thus far achieved insignificant proportions in Minnesota. Some of the best hardwood timber to be found in the country stands in Northern Minnesota, and it has not yet been touched because there has been no way of getting it out. Northern Minnesota ought some day to send out quite as much hardwood lumber as Wisconsin is now doing.

WOODSIDE ITEMS.

WOODSIDE, Sept. 6, 1889.

In spite of the cold southwest wind, heavy showers of rain fell last Monday and Tuesday which caused great annoyance among the farmers who are haying.

A slight frost was noticed on Thursday morning, but not sufficient to injure any of the garden vegetables.

The hum of the threshing machine greets our ear again, reminding us of the fact that harvest is once more over. There has not been enough grain threshed yet to make any estimate as to the average yield will be. As long as your worthy correspondent can remember, he cannot recollect a single year that the crops have varied so much on the same field, as this year. Of course it is owing to the drouth we had in the earlier part of the summer, but it seems ridiculous to see one part of a field yield 25 bushels to the acre while the other part will probably not reach 5 bushels to the acre, where all the land has the same elevation and has been prepared in the same manner.

Mr. E. B. Gustaf, a popular farmer of this town, threshed his golden grain last week and got 961 bushels on 45 acres of land, or an average of about 21 bushels per acre. We are told that some of his neighbors will not get over five bushels to the acre.

There has been more land cleared and broken this summer than all that has ever been broken in this town before.

Mr. Earl Foster, who has been suffering all summer with rheumatism, has been advised by his physician to go to a warmer climate. He has disposed of nearly all his personal property and offers his farm for sale at about one-half its real value. There is 40 acres broke on it, a good dwelling house, granary, and splendid stables. He offers the whole outfit for $800—a great bargain for any one who is seeking a nice home. Mr. Foster says he is bound to be in Louisiana, where he can feel the balmy breezes of the Gulf, before winter comes. We are sorry to lose you, Earl, but I suppose its no use coaxing when you have once determined to leave.

Mr. Frank Gravel, who is representing the well known grocery house of Anthony, Kelly & Co., Minneapolis, was seen in the city last Thursday, shaking hands with old friends on Main street.

Mr. S. W. Fisk, who is employed as temporary mail carrier, says the mail road will be impassible if not repaired at once. We think it high time that the overseers of highways were looking to their business.

FARMER.

(Extract from a letter from Hon. W. W. Thomas, Jr., late U. S. Minister to Stockholm.)

"I am pleased to learn that you have secured the Swedish National Lady Singers for a tour throughout the United States. I heard them last year at Stockholm, Sweden, and was delighted with their singing. They have really phenominal voices and render the sweet songs of their Fatherland with a freshness and power that I have never heard excelled. These eight beautiful young Swedish girls, dressed in the picturesque costumes of their native provinces, make a most attractive picture upon the stage, and when their pure young voices blend in song, they bring before you the wildness and grandeur of the Northland—that land which has given us Jenny Lind and Christine Nilsson."

Opera House, Sept. 19th.

The Northern Pacific.

Duluth News: The steady growth of its business and the encouraging rise in its stock must be most gratifying to the management of the Northern Pacific railroad. The recent action of the board of directors in endorsing Villard's blanket mortgage scheme has given a new impetus to the stock of the company and Wednesday preferred stock stood at 72⅝, the highest for some time. Under the management of Villard five years ago the preferred stock was above par and it would be no surprise if it should continue to go up until par value is again reached in a few months. The prosperity of the road is shown in the annual statement of earnings and disbursements. During the year ending July 30, the earnings of the road were: Freight, $12,877,838; passenger, $5,824,163; miscellaneous, $1,005,476, a total of $19,707,477. The operating expenses were $11,863,541. The other items to be charged against income amounted to a total of $7,803,547, and included $769,163 for rentals to the St. Paul & Northern Pacific, $1,060,738, to track roads, and $4,917,833 for interest on funded debt.

NOTICE.

On and after this date all bills against the city must be in the comptroller's hands not later than 4 p. m., of the Monday preceeding the stated council meetings. No bills will be audited after that time.

Newspaper Critics.

Northfield News.

If the people who read the papers would take the trouble to reflect a few moments upon the functions of a newspaper they would be less ready to criticise. Many a man when he pays his dollar or dollar and a half for a paper seems to think that it should be published for his especial benefit. One wants it made a red hot political paper, another is sick of politics and desires to read something else; this one thinks it all foolishness and waste of space to print personal items, that one depends entirely upon the newspaper to learn the news of his friends and acquaintances and is disappointed if he does not get it; the prosy, practical man is disgusted at poetry and sentimental stories and will not patronize the paper that publishes such stuff; the man of opposite temperament and ladies look for that class of matter first and care nothing for a paper in which it is not found. Some readers value a paper chiefly for its advertisements, others never read them and regard it as a fraud upon the patrons to fill the columns with such matter; most men will turn up their noses when they see an article on the fashions, while most women wouldn't give that article for the rest of the paper; the pious reader wants a preponderance of the reading to be of a religious nature, the worldly man doesn't want any of that kind of literature; the former looks for a full report of the proceedings of every religious body, the latter is anxious to learn the result of every horse race and prize fight, and thus we might enumerate by the hour the different classes of matter that the various persons would have excluded or inserted. The editor or publisher of a newspaper may have and should have certain well defined views on the leading questions before the public and should try to impress those views upon his readers, but he must also publish such general matters as his various patrons require, or they will not take the paper. He doesn't expect that every article will interest and benefit every person but he does expect that a portion will be acceptable to every one. A paper is supported by ministers, professional men, teachers, farmers, mechanics, merchants, laborers, men of leisure, women, all classes, and all have rights that should be respected, yet none have a right to demand that the whole paper be devoted to their interests and to grumble because it is not. It requires no small amount of labor to select such matter as will please and benefit all and not give undue prominence to one department at the expense of anothe, and perhaps if those persons who are always finding fault and suggesting improvements, were to try a month or two, they would not succeed any better than other men, and would not feel disposed to find fault with a really good paper because every column is not exactly adapted to their wants.

Horace Greeley: Numberless schemes have been devised for the purpose of advertising. Millions of dollars have been spent in trying to force the public to read advertisements against their will. These dodges are sprung upon them when they least expect them, and the effect is therefore annoying. It is as if a tramp should ring your front door bell and ask for the loan of a quarter. Advertising in a reliable newspaper is different. People expect to see it there every day. Advertisers, in dealing with the public, should remember that they are asking favors; they should do so in a courteous business-like manner. There is a time and place for everything, and the place for advertising is in a newspaper, and the time—every issue.

Ed. Walsh and Charles Jefferson received their watches from Winnipeg on Tuesday.

Mrs. John Wyand returned on Sunday morning from a visit to friends in Hudson, Wis.

Will and Henry Peterson had Francis take a picture of their fine carriage team on Tuesday.

There will be no services in Christs church next Sunday as the pastor has gone to Winnipeg.

A. R. Martin started east on Wednesday on a collection tour and to canvass for the Singer Sewing machine.

The result of the inquest at McIntosh showed that the death of Mr. Hofto was the result of accident.

One carload of cattle at the yards on Sunday and another on Monday kept Mr. Brown too busy to answer idle questions of the reporter.

Mr. McFarland closed the bargain with a company of farmers mostly in Andover, for the five-year-old Clyde "King David." The company made an excellent selection.

A. C. Wilkinson was up to Hallock on a business trip last week. On Saturday he went out with a party east for chickens. Says he thinks they are more plentiful than here.

Dan McKinnon is fixing up the old stand with a view to renting. If he should not rent it immediately he will occupy it as a restaurant again. Dan made a success of it while in the business.

Tuesday was not a very good day for runaways. The Grand Forks Brewery team took a spin but was stopped before any damage was done, Jud Carruth nipped a runaway in the bud and young Cleary, Herb's clerk did likewise by another.

Prof. D. M. Harper of the State Agricultural Experiment Station was in the city on Tuesday, and called at THE JOURNAL office. Bulletin No. 7, issued in April contained tables which showed that wheat grown from the blighted wheat of last season would produce the same kind of wheat and Prof. Harper says that his experience so far confirm that experience. He went out to the Himmelsbach Bros., place to see their crop. The question is one of great interest to our wheat-raisers.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONER.

Duties Performed by H. A. Taylor in the Office to Which He Was Recently Appointed.

Pioneer Press.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The appointment of a Western man as United States commissioner of railroads, and especially a man so well known in the Northwest as Hon. H. A. Taylor. of Hudson, Wis., naturally creates an interest in the office and its funcions. When the law first passed creating the place the officer was known as auditor of railroad accounts. It was afterwards changed to commissioner, though the duties were almost the same. The commissioner audits the accounts of all land grant railroads and railroads which received money or other aid from the United States. This, of course, includes nearly all the Western roads, or at least some portion of them. Mr. Taylor counts them by pulling from his pocket a stack of passes, about seventy-five in all, which would carry him free over every line of road west of Chicago. The Pacific roads which were aided by the issuance of bonds and other lines built upon the credit of the government are the lines most carefully looked after by the commissioner. All the grant roads are obliged to make full reports of all business to the commissioner, but the subsidy roads are obliged to notify the commissioner of every meeting of stockholders or directors, stating the object of such meeting, and make a report of the proceedings to his office. Several of the lines pay a certain percentage of earnings into the government treasury. To these lines the government pays nothing for transportation of troops, carrying the mails or any other service. The accounts for such service are audited by the commissioner and deducted from the percentage due the government.

In the commissioner's office there are expert bookkeepers to examine the accounts and books of the companies. There are also expert engineers who examine the road beds and bridges of all roads under the commissioner's jurisdiction, but more attention is paid to those lines which pay a percentage of earnings. The roads naturally desire to show small earnings and large expenses, as that would keep down the amount due the government. It is these features that the commissioner is especially called upon to look after.

The first case of importance which Mr. Taylor has taken hold of is that of the Union Pacific. This road turned in an account of $2,125,000 paid for rolling stock, but Mr. Taylor asserts that it does not own any part of the rolling stock. The road has issued a trust bond for the stock, and the entire equipment is owned by a trust company in New York. As this road pays 25 per cent. of its earnings to the government, the reported expense would make a difference of over $500,000. The commissioner says it is time enough to deduct this sum when the money is paid for the rolling stock, and the contract with the trust company does not expire for ten years. He has already begun proceedings to compel the road to pay the amount or show better legal grounds why it should not be paid. The office of commissioner of railroads is a bureau of the internal department, and is separate and distinct from the interstate commerce commission, although often confounded with that body. Since Mr. Taylor has been in office he has removed from the cramped and dingy quarters on the second floor of the pension office to large and airy rooms on the third floor of same building. He has appointed several new men and promoted others he found in the office. Several of his engineers and expert bookkeepers are visiting various railroad offices and preparing matter for the next annual report. The railroads are compelled to furnish transportation to the commissioner and to the men in his employ. If a man has a taste for traveling he is given an opportunity to gratify it as commissioner of railroads, but Mr. Taylor says the work of the office will confine him rather closely for some time, although before his time expires he expects to use some of many passes. A. W. D.

Among Railways.

Duluth Herald.

Donald Grant, of Faribault, who is the leading and monied member of the contracting firm of Foley Bros. & Co., having the Duluth & Winnipeg contract, as well as a member of the North Star Construction company, having the contract from the railway company, has just been interviewed. He says work is already being pushed vigorously on the line, and that in ninety days from date the track will be laid to the Mississippi River. Twenty miles were built last fall, commencing at Cloquet. This additional amount is fifty miles, making seventy miles from Cloquet to the Mississippi River, and that is sure to be completed Mr. Grant says, within the time named.

J. P. Sims, M. H. Foley and others connected with the contractors were in Duluth last night completing arrangements that have been under way for some time for the victualing of men on the work. The provisions will be shipped in part over the completed portion and distributed from there by water, and other parts will be sent up the Mississippi to Itasca for men at that end. It is proposed to put men along the line as thickly as possible, so as to carry on work in as many places as possible, and Mr. Foley does not intend to have by the first of September any mile of the distance without its diggers. To do this 3,000 men will be employed, 2,000 from this end and 1,000 from Itasca eastward.

It is worth while to notice that this active beginning of work on the extension dissipates the claim, loudly made and widely believed, by the opponents of the land grant to this road in the legislature last winter, that the company was not in earnest and did not intend to construct the road. It was alleged for the purpose of effecting legislation that the company desired to get the grant in order to sell it out, but the work under way now sets at rest all of the slanders of the past. The company has not the slightest doubt that when its line is completed it can go into the higher courts and get the lands granted it, but which a few corrupt legislators refused to turn over.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., SEPTEMBER 12, 1889

An Anxious Pharisee.

The National Tribune.

There is a paper in St. Paul edited by a Pharisee, who in a recent issue dips his pen in crocodile's tears and proceeds to set forth in the stock phrases of the habitual hypocrite, his concern for the veteran soldier. He goes into mock hysterics over the danger he points out.

After a few preliminary shricks of anguish he exclaims:

"The grave inquiry now presents itself to the country, how long can this pension crusade be continued without breaking up our whole pension system?"

Then he makes some remarks about "pension sharks."

By "sharks" he alludes of course to the veterans' legal representatives, who have wrung from a forgetful government the dues of their clients.

His anxiety about the "sharks" is made more conspicuous by the entire satisfaction of their alleged victims, but this soldier's friend (?) appears to be blinded to this condition of things by the intensity of his sympathy.

Mark the lamentation over a grave calamity whose possibility haunts him further on. He says:

"If it goes on at the present rate of of speed a reaction is inevitable, for there is always a limit to the tax-enduring capacity of a nation, and when that reaction sets in it is likely to swing to the other extreme."

Poor "nation." Why does not our hypocritical friend do something generous to help us? No doubt he is yearning, if the truth were known, to print all the government advertisements for the War Department and postoffice supplies needed at St. Paul, free of charge.

Mr. Wanamaker and Secretary Tracy would be glad to correspond with him with that end in view, no doubt, on behalf of a "tax-enduring nation." Just how much of this tax our anguish-burdened friend "endures" himself, we have no means of knowing, and he probably could not inform us. He probably never confronted a government tax-collector in his life, unless he was at some time in his career a "licensed victualer."

Proceeding he becomes actually bereft of reason, and gives utterance to his ravings as follows:

"If the bill he (Commissioner Tanner) has prepared for the approval of the Grand Army organization passes congress next session, it will bankrupt the treasury the first year."

Of course this is nonsense, or malicious misrepresentation, designed to create an anti-pension panic.

Then he grows sapient, and says in the abundance of discrete platitude:

"Soldiers as well as citizens doubt the wisdom of a policy that will force an already overtaxed people to turn against a system that was designed for a good purpose, and which should be maintained within legitimate limits."

"Legitimate limits" is what the veteran and his friends have been fighting for for years. They do not regard three or even 25 cents a day, the "legitimate limit" or compensation for lost health and a wrecked constitution, which is the price of the service rendered the government at the vital climax of its existence.

Here the hypocrite crops out strong as he proceeds to pronounce in favor of something against which his soul revolts if he dared tell the truth. He declares:

"Liberal, honest and legitimate pensions should and must be maintained, but it is taxing the patriotism of the people beyond limit to ask them, under the plea of providing for the old soldier, to bankrupt the national treasury for the benefit of the pension sharks."

All this is too transparent to deceive a child. The fact is that this St. Paul editor is opposed to all pensions of any kind, but he is afraid to say so for business reasons in the midst of a patriotic community. He might dare to be honest in New York city, dominated by Anglo-maniacs and Jewish importers, but not in the northwest. This anxiety for the veteran is a gauzy cloak, under which by indirection he strives to injure him and rob his widow and orphan. His convictions are bad enough, but his lack of courage to stand up to them is contemptible.

The editorial we are discussing appears in a late issue of the Globe.

Repeatedly Encored.

Janesville Gazette: The Stewart concert took place here on Saturday evening last and was patronized by a good sized audience considering the cold weather. They gave a very fine concert and were repeatedly encored. The troupe attended divine services Sabbath morning in the Congregational church and by request conducted the song service, rendering a number of sacred pieces with great beauty and power. This is Mr. Stewart's third visit to the Grove and he and his companions carry away with them the best wishes of many friends in this community.

FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

The Future of Dairying.

Hoard's Dairyman.

The low prices that have ruled for butter and cheese the present summer has forced the thought, with a great many, that the era of profitable dairying was over.—"The business is overdone"—they say—"and we must look for something else."

It is true that the day of profit for loose and slipshod ways of conducting the business is over. The old-fashioned method of milking a cow seven or eight months in the year, and in the summer at that, and devoting from three to four acres of pasture and two acres of meadow to her support, will no longer bring any profit.—Those farmers that expect to continue in that way might as well go out of the business at once for if they do not, they will soon starve out.

Every dairyman must make up his mind that the day of moderate prices has come; and that to stay. And we will say, right here, that we are glad of it. We hope to see the day when the finest of creamery butter will be afforded for twenty cents a pound the year round. When that time comes the consumption will be increased a hundred fold; the poor, as well as the rich, can afford to eat it, and the days of adulterated substitutes will be numbered. But to meet this inevitable decrease in price we wish to see butter and cheese produced for fifty per cent. of its present cost; and it can be done if only sufficient intelligence is used by the farmer in the production of the milk. Every man ought to see that the salvation that comes from high prices cannot long be maintained. The price we cannot control; but the cost of production we can control in a very great measure. The difficulty in this matter of cost does not lie with the creamery man or the cheese factory man so much as it does with the farmer himself. Nine out of ten pounds of milk that go into the production of butter or cheese cost the farmer twice what they ought to, or what they would, if only good, sound dairy sense and study were used. For this very purpose the Dairyman has been preaching for years the gospel of a wiser production. For this very purpose we incurred the large expense in procuring the "Cow Census" in New York, with which our readers are familiar. We desired to show the dairy farmers just how wasteful and expensive were the judgments and methods they were using to do a dairy business with.—We have forseen, for years, that a time must come when increased production would bring the price of dairy products down to a point where only a man who is a posted dairyman can make a living profit. The real facts that will govern in such a case we have stated a thousand times.

1. By the aid of the silo and other methods of preserving the food of the cow, we hope to both lessen its cost as well as increase its productiveness.

2. By a better intelligence in the ways of producing that food, we hope to greatly cheapen its cost. This will largely be brought about by better methods of culture, so that we will not go along year after year taking two acres of costly land to produce what one good acre ought to.

By the aid of good cow sense and judgment we hope to see every dairyman breeding and selecting a dairy cow, for this costly work of producing milk, so that we shall not go along year after year, feeding two cows, caring for two cows, and dancing a general attendance on two cows to get the product that one good cow ought to give.

It is this careless, foolish, slipshod, wasteful production of food in the first place, and then pouring it into a worthless cow in the second, that is sapping the life blood out of dairying. It is not the price we get half so much as it is the expense of production that is robbing us of profit. Half of the farmers will tell that it is the cost of hired help that takes away their profit.—We do not believe it. Indeed we know better. We believe the difficulty lies more in wasting good hired help on inadequate methods of producing the food, and forcing him to wait on poor cows, one-half of which never would pay any profit if the help was furnished free; that is grinding all hope out of dairying.

Hiram Smith is on record as having said he can produce butter at an average cost of 16 cents per pound; and that he would keep the old farm at the business, if that was the best obtainable price, before he would dare change to "general purpose farming." The reason he could do it, and still win, is because he makes the cost of production low, through raising vast quantities of food on a few acres, and feeds it to good cows.

The cost of producing fifty bushels of oats on one acre is more than fifty per cent. less than if the 50 bushels were produced on two acres. The cost of a pound of butter from a cow that produces only 100 pounds a year is twice as great as it would be if produced from a cow that yields 200 pounds a year.

The solution of the difficulty is to "know more" about our own business, so that we may be prepared to reduce the cost of production, and still make as much profit as ever.

The Farmer and Hard Times.

Northwestern Agriculturist.

There is much said in farm papers about the cheerless outlook for farming, which is ill advised and tends to increase a discontent already too great. Discontent grows out of hard times. Hard times come round periodically, the result of the tendency of human nature to run to extremes. Financial panics used to come about once in ten years. Recently, financial distress has not been so general; but periods of commercial activity are followed by periods of depression. When confidence in the future is felt and men of all classes buy freely, times are good. When confidence is lost, and men hoard money and are afraid to buy anything for fear of a further decline in price, we say times are hard and they are hard for every man who owes money. Money is a scarce commodity and its purchasing power is increased, so that the debtor is obliged to sell his product or property at a low price in order to get money to meet his debt. In good times, when produce and property sells quickly, he gets good prices and pays his debts with less of his product or property. This is the difference between good and hard times. The man who owes nothing suffers no loss or inconvenience in time of commercial distress. But in such times farmers are not the only sufferers. The past two years of depression has brought distress to the door of every class of workers in the country, and men in every branch of industry and trade have felt the pressure of the times. Merchants have sold on a declining market, and have lost. Manufacturers have produced their wares only to find it impossible to sell without a loss, and the only industries and trades which have flourished, have been those protected by combinations and trusts or other artificial conditions. In such times, it does not help matters to excite class prejudice, and by false statements lead farmers, or the laboring men of cities, or merchants or manufacturers to believe that they only are in distress and the rest of the world prosperous. So far as they cannot be remedied, these periods of low prices and financial depression must be borne with patience and fortitude. If remedies can be found, they should be manfully applied, not for the benefit of any one class, but for the benefit of all workers, whether by hand or brain, and against all drones and pirates, who live on money they have not earned. The farmer is not a greater sufferer from the prevailing hard times than forty-nine out of fifty residents of cities.

Stealing Pennies.

Western Rural.

Stealing pennies is usually considered a pretty mean act, though we suppose that there is not much difference in the matter of dignity, whether the thing stolen is a penny or a million of dollars. Trusts are usually organized, however, for big game. But the salt trust is a cent concern. The ordinary individual will continue to salt his food without being much inconvenienced by the rise in the price of salt. But the great high-toned gentlemen who compose the trust will be gathering up the farthings here and there, and the pennies from the larger consumer, and the dollars from other consumers, and chucking them into their capacious pockets, and the aggregate, as the old lady said, will be "quite a few dollars." There are consumers who will have to pay a noticeable extra sum for trusted salt. But it is very misleading to consider a matter of this kind upon the basis of what it takes from the individual. That is the favorite plan which the twine trust adopts to make its robbery pleasant to the grain grower. The fact that the salt trust is intended to get more money for salt than salt is worth, should always be kept distinctly in view. The trust is a dishonest scheme, and it is a scheme that promises a rich reward or the rich gentlemen who have conceived it would never have gone to the trouble of perfecting it. The salt trust will fleece the people out of thousands and millions before it gets through with them, unless the life is choked out of it. Now if an individual consumer should not be robbed of more than one cent, but the people of his town, as a whole, should be robbed of a hundred or five hundred dollars, there is just that much less financial ability in his community. The salt trust has possessed itself of money that should be permitted to remain in other pockets. So while the individual, as a rule, may suffer little, the salt trust is just as mean and dishonest as any other trust and should be fought with as great a determination to down it as if it were a sugar trust levying its four cents a pound more than sugar is worth.

The Railroad Trust.

Western Rural.

We expect that there will be a railroad trust. The gentlemanly pirates who control our railroads have been racking their brains for a long time to devise some scheme by which they could get round the Inter State commerce law and fall upon the people like robbers upon the traveler upon the way to Jericho. The presidents of the roads attempted to hatch such a conspiracy, but the egg got broken before the chicken got out. Then somebody else set himself to work to pull the crowd out of the hole into which the law placed them; and we expect the thing will yet be accomplished. The railroad business has come to be looked upon by the railroad managers as a great drag net to haul into the coffers of the monopoly all the wealth it can reach; and the managers are as uneasy as fish out of water, if they cannot use the net to its fullest capacity. It is true that as our roads are operated, the managers must have an immense amount of money. The question of giving value for money received by the roads—the fundamental question in all honorable busines transactions—never occurs to the managers. They are like the boy hunting the ground hog, they "have got" to have it. Their roads have been built at a represented cost which will average fifty per cent. more than they ever did cost. Bonds are out for this exaggerated cost of construction. The stock of their roads is watered from fifty to seventy-five per cent. and some of the roads carry a much heavier percentage of watered stock. Vanderbilt watered the New York Central seventy-five per cent. at one time. Now all of this stock and all of these bonds must be carried, or the road defaulting must go into the hands of a receiver, which is not always desirable, even in the peculiar way in which railroads are managed. Then the exhorbitant salaries are to be paid. Hence the railroad never asks: How much will a certain service be worth? It makes no difference to the management what it is worth. The business of railroading starts out with this fact: So much money must be raised this year to pay our big salaries and to pay interest and dividends upon an utterly reckless issue of bonds and stock. The money must be had, if it lies along the route of the road. If a man has a thousand bushels of wheat to transport he must be a victim; if he has a car-load of stock to send to market he must be mulcted.

It is to carry on this sort of corporate brigandage that a railroad trust is proposed. The Inter-State law has cramped the greed of the monopoly somewhat. It has given the people a little chance for their lives, but not the chance they will yet have. We predict, as we have always predicted, that the watered stock will yet be choked out of our railroad system by stringent railroad enactment. The time will come when that will be done, but just when it will come will depend upon how energetically the people demand it. Railroad management, as it exists to-day, is a crying wrong upon the people, and especially upon the producer. It must be remedied and it will be.

Salting Stock.

New York Examiner.

Too many farmers salt their stock on the "impulse, or spasmodic plan." That is, they give them an extra allowance one day, and in perhaps a week or fortnight, according to the urgency of farm operations, or the importance they attach to this matter, deal out another supply. This is certainly a wrong practice as stock should be salted at least twice a week and regularly. I am positive that if the housewife knew what an important factor this salting of cows is in buttermaking, some one would attend to it in a more systematic manner. This can be done by providing "salt boxes" attached to a fence, building or post, provided either with a hinge cover or a swinging door in front, in which is kept a supply of salt. In either case leave the door open for several days, and when closed you will be surprised to see how quickly cattle, horses and sheep learn to open it. You will also learn that by the old plan you have failed to give them an adequate supply. If possible have the cattle-box separate from that for the horses, as the former are rather dainty on this point.

Northwestern Agriculturist: All reports regarding the condition of stock in Minnesota and most part of the Dakotas are favorable. Pastures have been good, cool and rather cloudy weather has kept down their enemies—the fleas and mosquitoes, and stock has seldom had a better season. Meantime, a home market is being prepared at the Minneapolis stock yards, where facilities for both feeding and slaughtering northwestern cattle are being provided on a scale that evidently contemplates a large business.

American Farmer.

Out of a population of 60,000,000, says the Farmer and Dealer, there are probably about 21,000,000 who earn wages and live by work. Included in this count is something over 9,000,000 engaged in agricultural pursuits, and it appears that we have no other single industry that employs and furnishes a living for so many of our people. In fact, this industry can live without it. Here then, we see that we have in this country more than 40,000,000 people living without earning any wages, and most of them living directly or indirectly off the earnings of those who toil, and they, with all the dealers and traders, etc., are dependent upon the success of the agriculturist and the protection of the interest. Then it is proper for us to first examine this most important of all our industries, and see what dangers threaten. Now, what the farmer wants first is a good home market for all his surplus product. This cannot be assured while we import in one year more than $60,000,000 of food and live stock, not including coffee, tea, sugar and molasses. Why should we import into our country about $3,000,000 worth of vegetables, being cabbage from Holland, potatoes from Scotland, potatoes, beans and peas from Canada? If the farming interest is what we here claim for it, then is it proper for us to import $1,200,000 worth of hay, and $9,000,000 worth of breadstuffs and 20,000,000 dozen eggs, partly from Denmark and Sweden? We think it is bad policy. The farmer needs to be cared for first, last and all the time, in order that other industries may thrive with him and good wages be paid to manufacturing operatives as they go on turning our vast resources from raw material into that which is necessary for our welfare and safety in peace or war. Diversified farming is our only hope and safe anchorage at this time, and in it is the whole business. Let the diversified interests be built up from our own raw material and means at hand, and the people who engaged in the work will consume all the agriculturist produces, the market will be at home, and the nation will go on in prosperity, which is something that no nation has yet done without diversified interest.

They Meant It.

Western Rural.

Coming from a section where the harvesting was in progress, a gentleman said to us a few days since: "I was surprised to see so many farmers stacking grain loose. There are counties in which not a pound of twine is being used in the wheat harvest." When the farmers said they would not use twine they meant it. The farmers' "dander" is up in this matter. He has struck the twine people with a force that knocked the breath clean out of them, and as soon as he gets his grain in stack and has a little leisure he will give the twine newspapers a rap that will make their heads swim. The farmer is a good fighter if you can get him started; and he is started in the twine business. If anybody does not believe it, he can ask the fellows who tried to run up the price of twine, or the newspapers that defended and encouraged the sharks. There will be no twine trust next season. There will be no "shortage of raw material" either. The twine manufacturer's have had all the shortage-of-raw-material business that they want for some time to come. It will be astonishing to see how the sisal and manilla crop will yield. There will be dead loads of it hereafter. But now that we have got our hand in, let everything be done that can be done, to devise new methods of harvesting, find new material for twine and secure legislation that shall prevent the organization of such conspiracies. Let us move all along the line.

Northwestern Agriculturist: All farmers need to keep clearly in mind in all farm operations, that it is the net profit, and not the total amount of crop or the total amount of money handled, that decides whether or not business pays. Some most astounding records are being made by phenomenal butter cows, and the war of breeds is going on in dead earnest. But these tests, as reported, are mostly valueless to the practical farmer. The reports are remarkable for what they do not tell. To mean anything practically, the amount and kind of food should be given, and the cost per pound of butter thus ascertained. There is a vast difference in the capacity of cows to digest and convert into butter the ordinary feed of the farm, and the one which does this the most economically is the one which pays the owner best. Those which eat a good deal and produce little butter product should go to the butcher, or be kept for raising stock for beef. They are not dairy cows, and would not show a net profit over care and feed in butter product.

Are Your rors Short This Season?

Then there is the greater reason why you should save every dollar possible. You will not be practicing wisdom nor economy if you fail to procure one of the "BEST" Sickle Grinders. These grinders do not draw the temper, are simple, durable and a decided success. The stone does not gum up or become glazed, but is always sharp. Its cutting qualities are excelled only by the "diamond. If you have any old sickles that you cannot sharpen satisfactorily, try my grinder, and after seeing how easily you can make it as good as new, you will readily see how you can save a number of dollars by purchasing one. It is not necessary for me to tell you of the trouble you always have in grinding your sickles on a grindstone—you know all about it. With this grinder (after the knives are once adapted to the tone) you can sharpen a sickle in a very short time; you can also grind out the nicks so they will cut as well as the unbroken edge. The stone is pure curandron (not emery) and water does not affect it; it is porous and will absorb water like a sponge. A straight stone is furnished as an extra, with which you can grind plow points, axes, butcher knives, or, in fact, anything that needs sharpening. I will guarantee perfect satisfaction in every case.

'Round Home.

Wheat, No. 1 Hard, 63 cents.

Don't forget the Swedish Octette to-night.

Ladies, call and see Mrs. Bangs' new fall millinery.

Everybody goes to the Grand Forks Fair this week. By far the greater number will go to-morrow.

Hon. H. Steenerson went to Moorhead on Monday evening to try several cases before His Honor, Judge Mills.

A. M. Stewart went to St. Paul last Friday evening to attend to business the last expiring kick of the State Fair.

The weather for the past week has been very unpropitious, especially for those who were intending to thresh out of the shock.

De Forest Bucklen has rented the house of Wm. Kistenmacher, just south of Louis Fontaine's residence, and will now live at home.

John Ralston Jr., reports the loss of his three months old baby boy on Tuesday last. The little one had been sick but a little time with summer complaint.

L. H. Michaud has rented a house on corner of Ash street and Houston avenue, and will again be a resident of the city. Try as he may, he finds that he cannot find a better place.

Four different lines have been surveyed through the city, and competent engineers are at work trying to take out the curves. The company insist on having the best possible location for depot.

T. Facto has sold his residence on Hunter street to Onesime Ducharme, the original postmaster at Badger Creek. We learn that Mr. Ducharme will engage in the real estate business in Crookston.

City Treasurer Couvrette is fixing up his residence in fine shape. He has faced it on Ash street, put a brick foundation underneath and is putting a sidewalk around it. When completed he will have a neat domicile.

G. D. Francis' new residence begins to show what it is destined to be—a very handsome house. When completed he will have one of the slickest houses on the avenue. It is located on the J. R. Clements' property next H. M. Pierce's old residence.

The Polk County boys all flocked to the Clifton, while in St. Paul fair week. Mine host Baker knows how to entertain his guests and give perfect satisfaction every time. While there was room and to spare at other hotels the Clifton had not even a spare cot.

$100,000 to loan.

JOHN MCLEAN.

Wm. McLaughlin, representing Wyman, Mullen & Co., of Minneapolis, has done two eminently sensible things lately. He has married and determined to reside in Crookston. He is temporarily domiciled at the Commercial until he can secure a residence of his own.

Some miscreant broke the windows in John Ralston's house while John was away haying. Such acts of vandalism are worthy a heathen country but hardly a credit to a country pretending to be civilized. We should like to see such rascals get their just deserts.

A few weeks since THE JOURNAL called attention to the fact that the grade on the new line was insignificant and wholly inadequate. As a result of that kick the grade will be one foot higher all along the line. Dan McDonald says it will now be as fine a grade as any in the country.

Wabasha Herald: Senator and Mrs. Burkhardt arrived from Crookston on Saturday for a short visit with their son Otto. After looking over his busines interests here the senator will return to Crookston, where his presence is very much needed to take care of his extensive interests in that city.

Mrs. Clevis Champeaux died on Sunday of cancer of the breast. It will be remembered that when Milette's hotel burned, Mr. Champeaux' residence, which was adjoining, was also destroyed, and now Mr. C. is called upon to part with his wife. The funeral services were conducted at St. Ann's church on Tuesday, attended by hosts of friends.

H. B. Budd came up from Edna on Tuesday and dropped in to set that subscription ahead a year, a favor that THE JOURNAL is very happy to receive from all its friends. Mr. B. is buying wheat at Beltrami station, or will when there is any offered. Says that the wheat threshed from shock will not grade above 1 Northern, but hopes that wheat in shock will do better.

Hallock Enterprise: On Thursday morning a few flakes of snow fell and a tenderfoot was heard to make the remark, "good lawd is wintah in Minnesotah so unseasonable, ah." When we asked him to remain over another day and take a sleigh ride, he said, "ah, excuse me, I will, ah, return to Crookston, as Mr. Cooke, the ah, editor of THE JOURNAL said it was hot as hades there, ah." He left, and the publishers of Crookston will probably make it hot for him if he throws out any of his "gibberish" down there.

Eli Steenerson says he is no good as an actor. When it comes to personating another, somehow he can't "get there Eli!" Besides, there is the fear of recognition.

P. O. Schmidt returned from his visit to the State Fair on Friday morning. He thinks that "grand tournament" at Minnehaha park a good deal of a fizzle.

During the storm of Thursday lightning struck the Red River Valley elevator at Beltrami, setting fire to it. Budd rustled the fire brigade out in short order and by desperate fighting succeeded in putting out the fire with a loss of but $200 or $300.

The Japanese Village, or Grand Tokio Bazaar proved a wonderful attraction at the Minneapolis Exposition, the building being packed every day since they came. They are exceedingly deft workers and make the most beautiful articles "while you wait."

Prof. Clausen's Panorama—"The Great Northwest"—depicting the wonders of the Yellowstone National Park and the manifold beauties of the country between Minneapolis and Puget Sound is a wonderful piece of work and attracts large audiences daily. It is proving a great source of attraction and is without doubt one of the best panoramas ever placed on exhibition. It is exhibited twice daily in the new entertainment hall at the Minneapolis Exposition.

An individual, who said he hailed from the Thirteen Towns was hunting all over town one evening last week for a "round square." Some young fellows put up a job on him for fun, treating him every time he came "round" to a "square" drink and did not get onto his lay until they had squandered several dollars for whisky for him. When they got tired of setting 'em up he wunk a sly wink or two as he asked them if there was nothing else he could find for them.

We attended the State Fair on Thursday last and spent the day among its various attractions. The stock display is said to have been larger than ever before made upon the grounds and was a good one and the display of agricultural implements was very full and complete. The dairy show was convincing proof of the excellence of Minnesota as a dairy state, while the display of agricultural products spoke volumes for the wonderful productiveness of our soil. St. Louis County has erected a building upon the grounds in which was found a large collection of her mineral wealth which gives the visitor something of an idea of the extent of the mineral wealth of the state. We do not think as many farmers as usual were present but St. Paul, Minneapolis and surrounding country turned out fairly well. This is the first fair that we remember to have attended when the railroads have not had to fit up every flat-car they could get, to carry the crowds. We saw none this trip neither did the hotels in St. Paul and Minneapolis appear to be nearly as full as usual. St. Paul was in her holiday attire and the illumination on Third and Wabasha Streets was grand. Every evening Third Street from Wabasha down to Cedar was packed with people from 8 till 10 o'clock to promenade and view the enchanting scene. The bicycle parade on Thursday evening, when 200 bicycles were in line was the finest prade of the kind we ever witnessed and probably the finest ever witnessed in St. Paul. Each rider had his wheel gaily decorated as his fancy led him and nearly all carried Chinese lanterns. The fair managment report financial success.

THE JOURNAL is informed that Henry Nolan sold his residence property on the hill for $1200 spot cash and has moved into his building on Robert St., over Christianson Bros. office. It is said that Henry has dropped out of the bridge contract on the new road.

Judge Mills appointed W. F. Zwickey, M. C. Malone and Cyrus Holmes, as commissioners to appraise the damages on right of way on the D., C. & N. R. R. The commission met at the Commercial hotel on Tuesday, organized and left in the afternoon to perform their duties.

W. C. Simpson of Bellevue, Iowa, has been up to attend to the fall work on his brother's farm at Euclid. About 1 o'clock Tuesday morning the police caught onto an individual who was making Rome howl at a great rate in his efforts to get away from imaginary detectives and specters. He was taken to the lockup where it required several men to hold him, so determined was he to escape from the British myrmidons who were bound to rake him in. On his person was found a letter written in the Rochester insane asylum Aug. 30, signed "Mary Lavin," addressed "Joseph Lavin, Euclid;" received at Euclid Sept. 2d. Tuesday afternoon the man began to act and talk more rational and THE JOURNAL obtained an interview with him. While not all right yet apparently he appears to realize that something was wrong. He says that his name is Joseph Lavin that he is a carpenter by trade; owing to a big strike he quit the business and came into the valley to get work in harvest. He worked near Euclid awhile, went down to Argyle where, he says, he took a few drinks of whiskey that put the devil into him after that he has an indistinct recollection of going to Euclid and then coming to Crookston, where, on Monday afternoon he says he fell in with a man who was hiring a threshing crew, who engaged him, and on the road out gave him several drinks from a bottle. He says the man then told him he had no authority to hire men and so he came back to town and has no very distinct idea of what had happened since. He intimates pretty plainly that insanity is hereditary in his family and for that reason thinks it is bad for him to drink, and says he is done with it forever.

It Pays to Advertise.

On Monday Mr. D. T. Herriott wrote us from Edna to advertise the loss of three colts for him. The ad. had not been in type an hour before we received a telegram from Mr. Herriott stating that the colts had returned. You see those colts just saw it was no use trying to keep hid with a descriptive ad. in THE JOURNAL so they just came home and surrendered. Does it pay to advertise? well, rather!

Does it Pay?

Farmers who are in doubt as to the profits of stock-raising will do well to ponder over an item given THE JOURNAL by H. B. Budd, of Edna. Mr. Budd says that Mr. Street, manager of the Fisher farm, last week sold 16 head of mare colts for $3,200. As Mr. Budd very pertinently remarked: "That helps out a short wheat crop wonderfully!" There is not a wheat-raiser in Polk County who could not have a few colts to turn off every year.

Hubbard Independent: Jim Creighton left Webber's camp for Minneapolis with $32. The next day Webber and his men went down to Little Falls and lo! Jim was in the care of the sheriff for a drunk. He was dead broke and his money gone and he would have gone up if Webber had not taken charge of him. He is putting in his time now bumming drinks from the boys around the mill.

We'll bet you a dollar you are "off," Mr. Independent.

Miss Emma Veroneau starts for Chicago this week to select trimmings and all of the latest novelties in millinery for Mrs. E. E. Bangs' Emporium. Miss Veroneau is a lady of ripe experience and most excellent taste and our lady friends can rely upon her judgment implicitly. She will post up on all of the latest fashions and be prepared to turn out the latest New York styles upon her return. The ladies will do well to consult her.

C. W. Davis brought to THE JOURNAL office a sample of hemp raised on his farm in Onstad. It was planted on June 18th, but is sufficiently matured for working purposes. It stands about four feet high and judging by the looks of the heads, the seed yield would be immense. Mr. Davis will break some to see what kind of fiber it will yield. From this experiment we should judge the season long enough as this was planted much later than it should be.

W. C. Andrew, Averill, Carpenter & Co.'s genial representative dropped in to chat with us on Saturday. W. C. is something of a farmer himself having a nice farm a few miles from Minneapolis, whereon he raises grain and hay. He also devotes 25 or 30 acres to strawberries and vegetables. Says an acre of muskmellons has yielded carloads of nice luscious fruit that has netted a nice round sum. His sons conduct the farm while the old man coins wealth for himself and A., C. & Co.

EDNA.

Work on the new line progresses lively. A large force from St. Paul was put to work on the Fertile end on Friday last. The the track strikes the D. & M. about one mile north of Fertile and a side-track has been laid from that point to the Fertile depot. This is the only iron yet laid on the road but it is the intention to follow up rapidly as fast as the grade is ready.

Get Your Patent.

Register Dickmann informs THE JOURNAL that over 100 homestead patents were received at the Land Office during the past week and that there are now nearly 1000 ready for delivery. The homestead patents down to lost fall are all in and ready for delivery and the officials would like to have the owners call for them at once.

Strewn Thick with Men.

Duluth Herald.

General Manager Fisher, of the Duluth & Winnipeg road, said yesterday to a Duluth man who saw him in St. Paul that the line of the road was strewn thick with men, and that nearly the entire working force of 4,000 laborers was on the ground busily at work cutting timber, grading and blasting what little rock was found on the line. The work is light, except in a few places, and can be done quickly. The cutters and bridge timber men are also at work all along the line. The steel rails are already on the way from the Pennsylvania Steel company's works at Steelton. It will be delivered along the line at once and the work of tracklaying will begin next week. It is expected now to have the tracks through to the Mississippi River by Nov. 1st, which will give ample time for surfacing and working up the track by Dec. 10th, the date originally set for traffic and by which date the road must be ready, under a large penalty, to haul freight.

The Duluth & Winnipeg road will be built from the end of track to the Mississippi in less time, all things considered, than any railway has ever been constructed in this country. Of course the time is nothing like that of tracklaying on the Montana Central, where seven or eight miles were ironed a day, but the Duluth & Winnipeg had no preliminary work done, all winter was not spent in surveys and getting out supplies, in fact nothing was done until a few weeks ago. The line had to be surveyed in part, the work of getting in supplies and material all done after the word was given to go ahead.

It is not probable that anything but the survey will be carried on west from the Mississippi this winter, as it will be too late to do much in the way of grading through the wet and level country near Leech and Winnibigoshis lakes after December.

There is no line so handsomely equipped for Through Passenger Service as "The Northwestern Line"—C. St. P., M. & O. R'y—and the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Chicago trains over this line have a better record for reaching either end of their run "on time" than those of any other line in the country.

THE

All well posted travelers between the Twin Cities and Chicago take this line—particularly favoring the "Vestibule Limited," which carries the finest sleeping cars and coaches ever built, and also all classes of passengers, without extra fares. On the Lake Superior portion of the line, between Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, and St. Paul and Ashland, Pullman sleepers are run on night trains, and parlor cars on day trains.

HILL-KITTSON WIN.

Judge Brewer Dismisses the Farley Suit.

For a Fifth Interest in the Manitoba Railroad.

No Contract Existed Between the Parties.

St. Paul News.

The opinion of Judge Brewer in the celebrated case of Jesse P. Farley against James J. Hill, Norman W. Kittson and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway company was filed this morning. The opinion is in favor of the defendants, Judge Brewer deciding that the bill of complaint must be dismissed.

The suit was brought to recover a fifth interest in and one-fifth of the profits of the Manitoba railroad. Mr. Farley based his claim on an alleged contract which he asserted was entered into by the defendants and himself. This contract provided that Mr. Farley should receive a fifth interest in the property in consideration for his services in the sale to Hill and others. Farley was the receiver of the property at the time the agreement is alleged to have been entered into.

The court finds that there were four parties to the alleged contract upon which the suit was based. Of the four Mr. Kittson died before the trial of the case. Of the surviving three, Messrs. Farley and Fisher testified that the contract was entered into, while Mr. Hill swore to the contrary.

In the opinion of the court Mr. Farley was such an upright and honest man he would not enter into such a contract while in the position of receiver. Therefore the court thought that the evidence of Mr. Hill should be relied upon.

The St. Peter Herald says: "The farmers are the only class of citizens who are unable to form trusts and organize combinations." And the simple reason why they cannot combine is that there are too many of them who are blind to their own interests, envious of their neighbor's prosperity, and the general mistrust they entertain of their own class has its effect. They are too easily cajoled by the flattery of smooth tongued, silk-tiled political demagogues who are their "dearest and best friends" during the political campaign, but after election their friendship ceases and their promises are ignored. The farmers are not all of this class but there are enough such to break up every combination they attempt to make for their own protection. Farmers, place more confidence in your own ability to defend yourselves against other combinations, learn to trust your neighbors, and you will be able to form all the combinations necessary to your protection.

Does Wheat Inspection Pay?

Moorhead news.

The above question is suggested by an occurrence which was brought to the notice of the News very recently. Names are omitted for obvious reasons, but there is not the slightest room for any mistake in the occurrence, and what we say about it is as true as Holy Writ. A Clay County farmer sent two small samples of wheat to two grain commission firms in Duluth asking to have it graded. The wheat of the two samples was identical in all respects. They were scooped out of a sack of wheat which was not mixed but taken from the machine as the wheat was threshed, with the little cardboard boxes in which the samples were sent to the commission men. One commission man telegraphed that the sample had been inspected by the chief inspector at Duluth who graded it No. 1 Northern. The other telegraphed that the sample had been inspected by the chief inspector who graded it No. 1 Hard. Don't this look very much as though the system was worthless, if the samples were actually inspected by the state inspector? If there is any good in inspection why could not the state inspector tell that one of these samples of wheat was just as good and no better than the other? Where does the benefit to the farmer come in if he is liable to have his No. 1 Hard wheat graded by the state as No. 1 Northern and thereby lose three cents, the wheat also paying the expenses of inspection? It seems a useless expense to keep up a system of grades which is lacking in the definiteness that enables the state's own chosen agents to distinguish one grade from another, or to be more explicit, the highest grade from the next highest?

Of course the farmer referred to will ship his wheat to the commission man who says it is No. 1 Hard. But, if the farmer, who is undoubtedly an intelligent one, had sent only one sample, and it happened to have gone to the commission man who returned it No. 1 Northern and said farmer had not made any further inquiries he would have shipped his wheat to the commission man last mentioned and have lost one grade and at least 3 cents per bushel. Such results are well calculated to impel the belief that the existing system of inspection and commission handling is either a game of chance or a game of check and theft. It looks as if it was a question with the commission man whether or not he can safely bulldoze a grade out of a farmer and pocket the difference. If he feels sure he can make it go, he calls No. 1 Hard wheat No. 1. Northern and makes it pay well.

It does not necessarily follow that, in a case such as we have described, the samples were actually inspected and graded by the state inspector, and may not have been. Perhaps a state inspector does not inspect samples or decide any hypothetical cases, but defers action until the wheat itself in bulk is on the ground, and this fault which we see in this case, lies entirely with the commission man who gave the lower grade.

"Peterson" for October comes to us with a handsome new cover, which the publishers announce to be the first of a number of improvements about to be made in this admirable periodical. These changes and additions cannot fail greatly to increase "Peterson's" wide circulation, which has long been far beyond that of any other lady's-magazine in the country. The contents of this number are, as usual, of the first order of merit. The illustrations are excellent, the stories capital, and the fashion and household departments are models in their completeness. The list of premiums for 1890 presents a tempting array of attractions to getters-up of clubs. It will soon be time to decide on a magazine for next year. Our advice to families not familiar with "Peterson" is to send for a sample copy. They will certainly be induced to try it for a year, and thereafter "Peterson" will always be a necessity in the household. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

False Fable.

Evangelical Messenger.

The fable that "Fortune knocks but once at a man's door, and, if it is not opened to her, goes away, never to return," is not true. Every moment in one's life is a new starting-point for fortune, if we will have it so; not perhaps for the sort of fortune which means merely great wealth in money or goods, but the true and really desirable fortune which is the will and courage to accomplish the best thing in the world that we are good for, and contentment with its accomplishment. It is sometimes said of certain men that they "don't seem to be so very smart," but they are "growing men wherever you put them." That is because they are not always looking to the softening of their tasks, or seeking, as Emerson expresses it, for a "protected corner," but are going on as if their work was not only well worth doing for its own sake, but had possibilities in it for something better. The secret of success does not lie so much in any gift of smartness as in the disposition to "brace up" when the task of life is tedious and hard. Each day is freighted with glorious possibilities, and life to all is worth living and longing for if only lived right.

Northwestern Agriculturist: The number of silos that have been built in Wisconsin during the last two years will reach into thousands. Hardly a farmer who is well-to-do and keeps stock of any kind is without a silo. The Wisconsin farmer regards it as a necessity, and all the authorities, investigators and experimenters endorse it, except Prof. Sanborn, of Missouri, where the conditions are so different that he may be right in his conclusions. In Minnesota and Dakota there is a good deal of interest in silos, but as yet the number is comparatively few, but when the farmers of these three States have reaped two or three good crops, and paid off their debts, they will not be behind their Wisconsin neighbors, if these neighbors have in the meantime had no reason to modify their favorable opinion of the silo.

Filling the Silo.

A. J. Cook: If the silo is full to the top, it should be allowed to settle a day or two and then fill to the top again, which should be twice repeated. At the last a foot or two of cut straw should be put on top, and this weighted by a few boards to hold it down. The old way of weighting with tons of stone, earth, etc., is shown, by ample experience other than mine, to be utterly useless. It is labor thrown away. The old rule to cut and fill one day and rest the next, that the silage may heat and destroy the germs of fermentation and thus fill on alternate days, is not necessary. When we commence we push the work to the utmost till it is completed, and our silage is admirable. I advise filling rapidly, as I know it is safe and excellent in its results. There is no doubt that filling leisurely, as suggested above, will give just as good results, as many have proven this to be true; hence, if more convenient, the filling may go forward only on alternate days.

Evidences of Success.

Western Rural: Wilcox & Liggett are engaged in breeding Shorthorns and Holsteins in Northern Minnesota, where so many think it is too cold for anything to live in winter. On a recent visit to Minneapolis we met those gentlemen and their estimable wives, and were at once reminded of the success that they have achieved in their business. Both of them are common sense conservative men, and whatever they show themselves to be is the genuine stuff. In manner and appearance they give evidence of prosperity, and they are enjoying as great a degree of prosperity as any of their brethren in other parts of the country. We need not stop here to again say what we think of Northern Dakota as a live stock country. It is one of the best in the whole range of states. People are inquiring of us all the time as to where to go to engage in the live stock business. Go anywhere in the vast Northwest, or, in fact, we may say anywhere in the entire west.

American Farmer: The time has passed for farmers to depend on muscle and hard labor alone. They must use their brains as well as hands. They must do more thinking and planning if they desire to receive the best results. The lawyer studies law. The doctor medicine. The merchant must study commerce, the laws of supply and demand, and the banker must acquaint himself with the principles and details of finances. Just so the farmer must study farming. The experiments of last year in crop raising and breeding must be remembered and put to practical use this year. Not only his own experience but that of his co-laborers should be his to profit by. Farming is a science, and there many new things to learn in it yet; and the best and cheapest way to learn those things is by study. Take agricultural papers, read in their columns the experiences and observations of others and avail yourself of the many useful hints and suggestions.

Of all the domestic animals, says the Northwestern Agriculturist, that serve man's purposes, the horse has the most constant and unceasing round of labor, whether his fate be to draw the plow of the farmer or the carriage of the rich. The life of the farm horse is generally the happiest, as it is the most natural, his food the most varied, and his labor the least constant and taxing. The city horse is short lived. His artificial life makes him liable to disease, the hard pavements stiffen his sinews and ruin his feet, and the carelessness and neglect of his owner or groom shorten his days. Check reins make his life a burden and whalebone whips force him to undue and wearing effort. The horse seldom gets the considerate treatment he deserves.

Northwestern Agriculturist: The stomach of the horse is smaller in proportion to his size than any other domestic animal, and he needs food oftener and more concentrated than any other animals, especially when doing hard work. Corn is not a good summer diet, oats being far safer and better, but an occasional feed of corn gives variety, and horses like variety as well as men. It pays to give working horses the best and cleanest of hay. Wheat bran with corn makes a good occasional ration, and moistened clover hay is always relished. Teams should be watered before feeding, and not until some time after feeding and then in moderation.

MADE HIM A CHINESE MASON.

Honors of the Hung Shoon Tong Conferred on an American Actor.

Minneapolis Journal.

NEW YORK, Aug. 29.—The triennial initiation of new members into the mysterious order of Hung Shoon Tong, or Chinese Free Masonry, occurred last evening at the Chinese Masonic temple, on the top floor of No. 10 Pell street, in which the grand masters of Chinese lodges in Philadelphia, Boston and New York took part. The hall was packed by members of the Hung Shoon Tong, attracted there by the unusual sight of the initiation of a white man. The other candidates were, of course, all Chinese.

This Caucasian Napoleon of curiosity-seekers refused to give his entire name to the reporter, but said that he is called by his Chinese friends "McKee," and by Americans "Mac" and "Jim." He is in the theatrical business.

He was introduced to the members of the Lung Gee Tong lodge by another influential member named Sing. At the initiation, which began at 8 o'clock in the evening and lasted till 9 o'clock the next day, poor "McKee" was stripped and made to put on Chinese blue and yellow blouses and sandals of straw, and made to kneel on all-fours before the Joss with the rest of the candidates to receive the sermon of the Grand Master in simon-pure Chinese.

"I want an interpreter to digest this important instruction," bawled the perspiring Anglo-Saxon. There was a big commotion and much suppressed laughter among the audience. At last an interpreter was found, who went through the long and weary interpretations all the night, though in small sections at a time.

When the ceremony was only about a quarter through, about 2 o'clock in the morning, "Mac" wanted to make a sly bolt for the door; but he was prevented by the guards of the entrance. He finally went through the whole business, and was congratulated by nearly 400 members, who received him with cheers and handshakings, and in conclusion a fat roasted pig was cut up and made into sandwiches, of which "Mac" partook liberally. The fee for this initiation was $10.

FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers on route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

For further information, maps, rates and publications in regard to the resources of the four new states, write or apply to F. L. Whitney, Gen'l Pass. and Tkt. Agt., St. P., M. & M. Ry., St. Paul, Minn.

Minneapolis Journal: The Duluth people are so pleased with their little 2,000 barrel mill that the News ventures to say that Minneapolis will not long be the "Flour City." Oh, well, let them talk. It is no wonder they are proud; that one little chick is all they have got.

And yet that one "little chick" seems to make you feel mitey oneasy.

The Old Southern Shriek.

Renville Star: When southern newspapers shriek about the amount they are contributing to pay pensions for Union veterans, it may be well to remind them that in one item alone—that of internal revenue—the state of Illinois last year paid nearly four times as much as the whole of the eleven states which constituted the so called Southern confederacy. The total collection in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia last year were $8,276,000, while the collections in Illinois were $31,000,000.

To Build its own Ships.

Duluth Herald.

It is stated that the Northern Pacific Railway company is considering the question of building a number of boats to be used in carrying out its ambitious projects in seaboard and transcontinental business, and in a degree to stop the flow of western business to the Manitoba, which now possesses one of the finest line of steamers on inland seas, and whose competition on through business has been already felt by the Northern Pacific most severely.

Although the matter has been brought up several times in Northern Pacific councils, yet until the Manitoba built its fast freight fleet—all roads in Duluth their standing on the same terms—nothing but discussion was indulged in. But the time has come for such an addition to its carrying force, if it would keep itself on the same footing with its greatest competitors; therefore, the line will be built. And this step has been taken as one of necessity. Never has a line of boats been built to run in conjunction with any railroad that did not have profits from incidental carrying trade, trade having no real connection with the railroad itself. This fact has a weight in itself that has determined the Northern Pacific to enter the lists and make a bid for general lake freight trade. The commerce of the lakes has grown to enormous proportions, and the prominence of the Northern Pacific in the commercial world will enable it to easily make necessary arrangements.

Two things the Northern Pacific will take into consideration in building its line of boats. These are, speed and carrying capacity. Upon these hinge the success of the line in competition with the splendid craft of the Manitaba. But the solution to these two problems—speed and tonnage—has been met, and that by a Duluth man. To Capt. McDougall the Northern Pacific people are looking to build them a line of boats that will handle their freight, consuming little time on the journey and with greater carrying capacity than any system of lake craft now afloat. It is said that negotions are pending, and that Capt. McDougall will build several boats for the Northern Pacific road after his models now afloat, and if the first boat built with engines proves the success of the 101 and 102, then after this style will the entire fleet of the Northern Pacific be fashioned.

It is now assured that the next vessel of the McDougall type, the 104, will be a steamship. She will have engines of great power, and will be used, not only as a freight carrier, but to pull two or three others of the same class. She will pull the 102 and 103, and by next spring the American Steel Barge company will be sending a tow of 9,000 tons capacity out of Duluth three times a month. "Then," say leading members of the company, "let owners of costly present style ships look out." There is no doubt that while the present style ship is making both ends meet on two-cent wheat or $1.25 ore freights, the McDougall pattern vessels will make money rapidly at one-cent or fifty-cent ore. The Northern Pacific recognizes this fact as well as anyone else, and it proposes to have the best.

In this connection it may be stated that there are indications that the Manitoba road is to make a through rate, from the wheat fields to Buffalo, elevator charges and vessel rates included, being able to do so by means of its elevators here and its line of ships. This rate must be met by the Northern Pacific and the other elevator companies, and this will probably be done by the Northern Pacific, the Lake Superior Elevator company, which is in contract arrangement with the road, and the ships to be built by the railway company. That such a line of ships is needed by the road is evident and from many remarks by officials of both companies it is plain the McDougall whale back ship will be the boat built.

The Cost of Pork.

The Northwestern Agriculturist.

The cost of feeding a hog until it weighs 350 pounds at 18 months, and what to feed and how to feed is given by the "Swine Journal." From the calculation it is evident no pasture is to be provided. He says when the pig is weighed his food should be as near similar to the milk of its mother as possible, so he recommends a composition of the following proportions: twenty pounds linseed meal, sixty pounds of bran, and twenty pounds of corn meal. He then proceeds:

Let us suppose a litter of pigs to be four weeks old, and to weigh 15 pounds each. Some might suppose this to be a very light weight, but they will not, after they have weighed several litters. Let the ration we have mentioned be cooked into a thin slop; feed it blood warm four times per day, feeding only what they drink in three or five minutes. Such pigs will eat from 1½ to 1¾ pounds of dry material for the first ten days; be careful not to overfeed. The second ten days they will eat nearly 2¼ pounds each per day. The third ten days they will eat about 2¾ pounds; fourth ten days, 3 pounds; fifth ten days, 3½ pounds; sixth ten days 4 pounds. The average ration of the first 60 days after weaning, will be about 2.88 pounds of the dry material of the food before cooking. The average gain should be one pound each per day or 60 pounds. Each pig would eat 2.88 pounds per day, or in the 60 days, 34 pounds of linseed meal, costing 43 cents; 102 pounds of bran, 76 cents; 34 pounds of corn meal, 25 cents—equal $1.44. The pigs now weigh 75 pounds, and have cost, say, $1.94 each. For the next 100 days, feed one-half corn meal and half bran, soaked or cooked, and if the latter, they will eat about 3½ pounds each per day—if only soaked perhaps more; and each pig should gain about 120 pounds, but we will put it at 100 pounds.

Now beyond this, pigs may be fed on corn ground in the ear, as the cob gives bulk in the stomach, and keeps them more healthy. If not ground, cob and all, then feed each two quarts of short cut clover hay, which has been soaked with the meal, and all stirred up together. This gives bulk and porousness to the food in the stomach.

The last 175 pounds may be put on in 150 days, but let us suppose that it takes the rest of the year—that it requires 365 days to give a pig the weight of 350 pounds. This will not require cramming, but simply skilful feeding. The last 175 pounds gain will require about 4½ pounds of corn to each pound gain. This will make the 350-pound pig cost three cents per pound live weight. But it is easy to see that these figures could be reduced on a large scale—the bran or middlings and the corn would cost less. The following statement give us material for growing a pig after weaning; 996 pounds of corn, 487 pounds of bran, 34 pounds of linseed meal, costing about $10. The pig at four weeks old is supposed to cost 50 cents, equal to $10.50, or three cents per pound for a 350-pound pig.

If the pig requires 10 months to reach this weight, the cost will be more. I have not counted the benefit of pasture. If the pigs are farrowed in the fall, and have a warm pen in winter, they make the same progress in the first six months, and have the benefit of pasture the second six months, which would reduce the cost; but this statement is based wholly upon skillful grain feeding.

Farming in the Northwest.

Northwestern Agriculturist.

Some paragraphs about cheap lands and cheap farms in the South have been going the rounds of the papers, which are wholly false or misleading. Worn out farms can be had at low prices in all the older states, but to grow crops, commercial fertilizers must be applied which cost more per acre than the price of good land in Minnesota and Dakota. If fertile lands are for sale cheap in old states, it is because society and surroundings are unfavorable, or because of malaria or other fever producing conditions that make life a burden. There is no land in the United States so low in price as that of Minnesota and Dakota, equal in fertility, in climate, in social advantages, and in future possibilities. These are facts, and twenty years from now, when every quarter section is a farm and production is vastly increased, the wonder will be that people were so slow to realize the attractions of this magnificent agricultural empire.

Northwestern Agriculturist: No animal needs a strong and vigorous constitution more than the profitable dairy cow. Beef breeds are only expected to exist, grow, and lay on fat, but the dairy cow must exist, and turn the food of the fields into that most wonderful of all products, milk, a complete food in itself, refined as no chemist could refine it, and adapted to sustain the highest form of life. The capacity to transform food into milk beyond what nature intended for the support of the calf, is the result of generations of careful breeding, and is to a certain degree abnormal and an extra tax on the vitality of the cow.

In New England.

The Holstein-Friesian Register.

Recent purchases by New England breeders have been of a very important character and will exercise a great influence in the improvement of the pure-bred herds of this section. The main idea of these purchases has been in the direction of improvement of the butter qualities. The last event of this sort which we have to record is the establishment of a herd of rich milkers by Mr. E. J. Stone of Amherst, Mass. This gentleman has purchased of Messrs. Chas. Robinson & Son, Barre Plains, Mass., several remarkable cattle of great promise. Mr. Stone's selection from Riverside herd was the son of Tritomia Mercedes Prince, 3543, out of the famous prize winner, Jepma 2d, 33, called Jepma 2d's Tritomia Mercedes Prince, 3543. The selection is indeed a promising one, for the animal is of high individual merit and is as rich in pedigree as any which we have had the pleasure of examining. Jepma 2d, his dam, it will be recalled, was for many years a leader in the western show rings and is a most excellent performer at the pail and churn. On the sire's side the performances of the Tritomia and Mercedes families form marks of progress in this line of breeding, and are ever recalled with pride in the race. For females with which to follow out this line of breeding, Mr. Stone selected several daughters of Mercedes Mahomet, 2943, a son of Mercedes 2d, butter record 26 lbs. 13 ozs. in seven days, and by Mahomet 3d, whose ancestry is of illustrous character, combining the blood of Rip Van Winkle, the sire of Echo, 23,700 lbs. milk in one year, and of Rhoda, 21,770 lbs. in one year, the greatest of the Texelaar family, and of the extremely rich milkers, the Aegis family, through Aegis 69, 18 lbs. 2 ozs. butter in seven days, a record not so large considered by to-day's great performances, but great inasmuch as it is evidence of a most prepotent quality in all the Aegis family. Mercedes, the dam of Mercedes 2d, was one of the great cows of the breed and a grand tribute to the skill of her importer, Mr. Thos. B. Wales. She is known to the world as the cow which won in the competition for the Breeders' Gazette Challenge Cup for the largest 30-day butter record, competition open to the world, with a record of 99 lbs. 6 ozs. of fine butter. This record beat the crack Jersey cow of the times, Mary Anne of St. Lambert. Breeders, however, value her still more for the great performances of her son, Mercedes Prince, whose daughters have as two-year-olds tested a pound of butter to 16.22 lbs. of milk, averaging in seven days 16 lbs. 5 ozs. each; and also for Mercedes 2d's great performance of 26 lbs. 13 ozs. of butter in seven days. The average record of Mercedes Mahomet's ancestors is unequaled by but one bull, if we are not in error, and it is a great thing to say of a sire that such an average is 25 lbs. 5½ ozs. in seven days. The names of these Mercedes heifers are Lucena 3d, 9263, Memoria 2d, 9265, and Poppy 4th, 9266, each a very superior specimen and promising well. Another superb heifer of this purchase is Lady Thurston 2d, 1341, the prize yearling at the New England Fair, 1887, and her daughter, Aaggie Thurston, 13872, by Princess Aaggie's Royal, 4492. Tracing the pedigree of these last it is found to be of noted strains, and quite as highly valued by many as the Mercedes blood. It is a matter for congratulation that the foundation of Mr. Stone's herd has been so carefully and well chosen. Success is in his grasp if good luck and care are hand in hand.

Northwestern Agriculturist: Writers on dairy topics are again going over the discussion of size in dairy cows, some arguing that the smaller the cow the less food to sustain the machine and the more net profit in butter or cheese, as if every farmer who has raised or fed live stock does not know that profit depends on digestion rather than size. Some 1,600 pound horses will grow fat on what some 900 pound horses would lose flesh on. A 1,500 Cruikshank shorthorn steer will keep plump on what barely sustains life in a lean scrub. Individuals of the same breed differ. It is nonsense to say that small cows consume less food than large ones, unless temperament, and the capacity to assimilate food are taken into account. Dairy cows must be selected as individuals after tests, showing what they can do on a given amount of food, and not according to size, color or breed. Many large cows are worthless for the dairy, and many small cows lose their owners money every day, but neither the good or the poor ones are confined to large or small individuals or breeds. The question is how much net profit will this particular cow earn in the dairy? Not how much will she weigh, or what is her pedigree or breed. The breed which can show the largest percentage of profitable cows should be the most popular.

John Bull's Foolishness.

The Holstein-Friesian Register.

England prides herself on free trade, open competition to all and fair play in regard to the importation of Holstein-Friesians (Dutch cattle,) the greatest breed of milk producers the world has ever seen, the government is anything but fair.

These cattle are excluded from England on the ground that they might introduce pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious disease.

During the past 25 years the United States has been constantly improving her dairy cattle by importing and breeding, until she has outstripped all others in making not only the greatest individual butter and milk records, but also the largest averages for entire herds.

This honorable and praiseworthy supremacy is principally the result of importing and breeding Holstein-Friesians (Dutch cattle.)

The London milk producer would gladly fill his stables with Dutch milch cows, to the exclusion of Shorthorns if John Bull would allow it, but the proud old free trader wants all to believe that his Shorthorns are the best milch in the world, and he has stuck to it so long and keeps so completely in the dark as to the merits of other breeds, that he induces many otherwise intelligent dairymen in England to think he is right.

Why, it is not five years since Mr. James Long, one of the most intelligent men on dairy subjects in England, and who for years has been a professor in the Cirencester Royal Agricultural College, ridiculed me for publishing in the London Live Stock Journal the milk record of Echo, 23,775 1-2 lbs. in one year.

Mr. Long endeavored to make the English readers of the Journal believe that Echo's milk record was solely fabricated by my fertile brain.

Since that date, however, many Holstein-Friesion cows have made annual milk records of over 20,000 lbs. in one year, and a few have excelled Echo's great record; the greatest at this date is Pietertje 2d's record of 30,318½ lbs. in one year.

Pietertje 2d's milk record, with a detailed description of her feeding, care and milking during this test, I sent to the London Live Stock Journal for publication, but as it was considerably more than double that of any Shorthorn cow ever mentioned in any English work on the dairy, I suppose that the editor, like Professor Long, thought I was again drawing on my imagination.

Thus John Bull, by excluding Dutch cattle, is biting off his own nose, while the United States has taken the first place among the breeders of dairy cattle.

Holstein-Friesian Register: Hoard's Dairyman inquires: Is our information at fault, or is the Prairie Farmer incorrect, when it says of the Holstein breed: "They have made not only the greatest milk records of any known breed, but also the highest butter record known—larger than that of the Jerseys."

Our information is that T. B. Wales' Holstein-Friesian cow, Lady Baker, that in June last made 34 lbs. 6 ozs. of butter in a week, stands at the very top as a butter producer. There have been several Jersey cows that have made more than that per week, without counting Princess 2d, that produced 46 lbs. 12 ozs. If we are incorrect will the Jersey Bulletin set us right?

We await the Bulletin's statement in this matter, but will volunteer the information that in the last volume of "Butter Tests of Jersey Cattle," containing 197 records, the highest is 29 lbs. 12 ozs. This yield has been surpassed three times by Holstein cows during the past year, and yet Gov. Hoard says these are not cows for the butter makers. Never mind, you'll catch up with the procession some day, Governor.

We do not understand why a practical farmer should hesitate between a large and a small cow, even though both show the same relative proportion of quick profit; that is, the profit aside from the calves and the ultimate results at the shambles.

If it be conceded that a small breed produces in proportion as much as a larger one, can there even then be any doubt as to the economy of using the large animal in practical farming? Otherwise, why should not the farmers keep goats instead of cows?

The item of care alone should settle the question. But if it be shown that the larger breed produces more good milk, for instance, in proportion to the food consumed, is there still a farmer who will accept of the dogmatic statement that the profitable dairy cow is one of about 800 lbs. weight? And if it be also shown that the small breed is an unprofitable producer of veal calves, steers or working cattle and that the carcass of the cow, when her life is no longer useful in the dairy, is a badly shaped and unprofitable one for the butcher, does the practical farmer hesitate as to which breed he shall use?

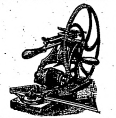
C. H. SAAKE,

ROBERT STREET CROOKSTON.

A Word to the "Wise Farmer."



Are Your Crops Short This Season?

Then there is the greater reason why you should save every dollar possible. You will not be practicing wisdom nor economy if you fail to procure one of the "BEST" Sickle Grinders. These grinders do not draw the temper, are simple, durable and a decided success. The stone does not gum up or become glazed, but is always sharp. Its cutting qualities are excelled only by the "diamond. If you have any old sickles that you cannot sharpen satisfactorily, try my grinder, and after seeing how easily you can make it as good as new, you will readily see how you can save a number of dollars by purchasing one. It is not necessary for me to tell you of the trouble you always have in grinding your sickles on a grindstone—you know all about it. With this grinder (after the knives are once adapted to the tone) you can sharpen a sickle in a very short time; you can also grind out the nicks so they will cut as well as the unbroken edge. The stone is pure curandron (not emery) and water does not affect it; it is porous and will absorb water like a sponge. A straight stone is furnished as an extra, with which you can grind plow points, axes, butcher knives, or, in fact, anything that needs sharpening. I will guarantee perfect satisfaction in every case.

'Round Home.

Wheat, No. 1 Hard, 65 cents.

Fashion says the confusion must go.

Mrs. Henry Lewis returned from her visit last week.

Sunday's rain was tough on all grain not yet in stack.

R. A. Wilkinson was up this week sizing up the situation.

Concord grapes; a choice lot just received at Wm. Clements.'

Mrs. H. A. Mason returned from her visit to Chicago last week.

It is said that Joseph Daoust was worth $20,000 at the time of his death.

Fruits, did you say? Will Clements says he has them in any quantity desirable.

We are told that A. N. Hixson will ship good wheat for farmers for one and one-half cents per bushel.

O. C. Bergland reports that his wheat grades from 1 to 3 Northern. He thinks that no 1 Hard grade will be given this fall.

Mrs. C. S. Spendley went over to the fair at Grand Forks last week, leaving the Judge to keep house all alone for awhile.

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Bjoin are rejoicing in the arrival of a little lady to live with them. She arrived on Thursday last and is doing nicely.

The town seems pretty well filled with fruits of all kinds. Watermelons are selling at 15 to 20 cents each, and mush melons from 5 to 20.

The landlord of the new hotel Dakotah, in Grand Forks, has got into hot water and forced to give up the ship. It is said that he mortgaged property not belonging to him to obtain credit on the furniture.

The Catholic church at Red Lake Falls was destroyed by fire last Saturday night. The job is said to be incendiary and doubtless the result of the church row they have recently had. No arrests so far reported.

Harry Attix, the Fifth ward rustler, tells us that he is now prepared to offer greater bargains than ever before known in this city. He invites inspection. For groceries give him an order and see how promptly and well it will be filled.

W. G. Newton, of Mapleton, Cass County, D. T., was in the city on Saturday visiting relatives and renewing old acquaintance and, of course, dropped in to interview THE JOURNAL. He thinks our crop prospects here better than in his locality this year.

The Carman hotel property has passed into the hands of C. W. Palmer, the former mortgagee, who desires to sell or rent it. It would make a good city residence for some large farmer who desires to live in the city winters, having ample stable room for stock.

Fred Date came down on Thursday with a countenance on him frightful to see. Looked like he had an apple dumpling under his eye. After interviewing a good dentist a different look came o'er him and he departed for home on next train much happier by far.

John C. Wells, of Fond du Lac, was in the city last week on business connected with his farm at Edna. He is one of the proprietors of the old Reis farm. Says the business under the able management of Mr. Noble has paid a satisfactory dividend this year, and they will enlarge operations next year.

Among the prominent citizens of Warren that we noticed at the concert on Thursday evening were: A. Grindeland, Geo. Holden, Otto Edwards, L. Lambertson, E. J. Rogem, John E. Olstrom, Mr. and Mrs. W. N. Purcell, Nels Larson, J. R. Lokin, Peter Helm, August Lundgren, A. N. Hunter, John Ruedy, Martin Noble and lady, A. Garbourg and lady, N. N. Lunden, Peter Lofgren, H. O. Hanson, H. Bakke, Ered Bakke, Frank Peterson, P. Nelson, I. Lindburg and others. They all unite in pronouncing the concert the finest they ever attended in the Northwest.

The lovers of song of Crookston and vicinity were treated to such an entertainment as is seldom offered, in the concert given by the Swedish Ladies' Octette, on Thursday evening, and the fact that the Opera House was filled to overflowing shows that our people appreciate a good company. The names of the ladies composing the troupe are: Miss Agnes Staberg, Miss Wilma Lundborg, Soprano; Miss Maria Heden, Miss Jennie Broberg, Mezzo Soprano; Miss Elizabeth Bruse, Marie Sohlberg, Alto; Miss Helene Lofgren, Miss Amelie Heden, Contralto. It is rumored that the company will be broken up at the end of the present season by the marriage of two of its members, Miss Agnes Staberg, who, it is said, is engaged to Emil J. Hall, manager of the A. E. Johnson Emigration Company, St. Paul, and Miss Jennie Broberg, who, it is rumored, will wed an Omaha doctor.

Judge Mills will hold a special term of court beginning Oct. 10th.

I. U. Jennings has sold his elevater.

Austin Larson reports the arrival of a fine lad at his house on Thursday evening.

Mike Leguce is a lonely bachelor no more, his better half having returned last week.

Hay upon the market is held at $7. Not much coming in and not much demand.

E. Asselin, informs THE JOURNAL that a young grocer came to live with him on Friday last.

The fair at Grand Forks is pronounced by all who went from here to have been a great success.

Mrs. Robert Stanton, who has been very sick with typhoid fever is reported to be out of danger and slowly gaining.

Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Miller are rejoicing in the arrival of a young attorney which event occurred last week. All doing nicely.

Col. Gorgas went out to Pillard's slough Friday to exercise Ben on dux. Says a teal or so is all he saw none of which he got.

A. D. Stephens wishes to say that for the next 30 days he will sell any farm on his list at a great reduction so that purchaser can have time to plow it all this fall.

$100,000 to loan.

JOHN MCLEAN.

Senator and Mrs. H. Burkhardt have returned from a pleasant visit to the old home in Wabasha. Incidentally they looked in upon the State Fair and the Minneapolis Imposition.

Who says times are dull, no money stirring? THE JOURNAL knows of several real estate deals on the tapis several of them spot cash besides a number involving a time consideration.

M. Lefebvre reports that he has threshed out a portion of his wheat which turns 16 bushels per acre. He says he can get only 1 Northern offered and his wheat is plump, good color and weighs 61 pounds per bushel.

Mine host Benedict formerly of the Belmont house, Fosston, was renewing old acquaintances in the city last week. He has been on a cruising voyage through the Red Lake Reservation and reports having had a grand time.

Misses Edie and Eunie Copeland arrived from the suburban retreat at York, to attend school. They are domiciled with the family of I. U. Jennings until the arrival of the rest of the family which will be within a few weeks.

Louis Dakota, of East Grand Forks was brought before Judge Ives, by dept. U. S. Marshal Gus Beaulieu, on Tuesday, on a charge of selling whiskey to the Indians. He was committed to the Ramsey County jail to await trial at the next term.

A. J. Ellingbo has rented the Norman house, thoroughly renovated and painted it from garret to cellar and will open its doors to the traveling public this week. He has had experience as a hotel keeper in Faribault and knows how to keep hotel.

News was received last week of the death of J. L. Daoust, at some place in Canada. He was on his way from Valleyfield, near Montreal in Canada, with a carload of horses, and while at some station enroute he was run over and severely hurt. The particulars are meagre as to how the accident really occurred. He lived nine days after the accident. Mr. Daoust was for seven or eight years a resident of Polk County, was one of the first aldermen elected from the Fifth ward when it was organized. His wife died in the first week in November 1886, of consumption. They had been married but a short time. Since then he has spent a great deal of his time at his old home in Canada, generally passing the summer time here. He was to have been married to a lady in Canada on the day that he was buried. Mr. Daoust had a great many friends in Polk County who will regret to learn of his sad death.

Satisfactory progress upon the new road is reported all along the line. It will doubtless be here on time.

The harvest festival in Christ church this evening should draw a large congregation. The Rev. F. B. Nash of Fargo will preach, and the service wholly choral with Stainer's beautiful anthem, "Ye shall dwell in the land." The service will begin at 7:30 o'clock.

Complaints are heard to the effect that the recent rains have wetted into stacks doing much damage and many are opening out their stacks to save the grain. An unusual number of weeds is said to be the cause. Verily the course of wheat this year is perilous in the extreme.

E. C. Davis is rushing the bridge work on the new road just as fast as the graders will admit and the boys say it looks like old times to hear E. C. yell out to them to "get a move on you." He is one of those energetic kind who make business just get right up on its hind legs and hum on the slightest provocation and is right in his elements on a job of that kind. The ties and iron will not have to wait a minute for Davis.

The daily morning Times will be launched upon the troublous sea of journalism in Minneapolis on Oct. 1st, with that experienced navigator, C. A. Nimocks, as captain, and the able seaman, R. B. Gelatt, as first mate. They claim that a superior telegraphic service is the lighthouse that will keep them off the reefs, and superior facilities for handling the craft with speed will enable them to make the landings promptly on time. The passenger tariff—2 cents a mile—is an entirely new departure in morning journalism that makes old craftsmen shake their heads dubiously and unless the freight rates are pretty stiff, causes fear for the success of the cruise. However, as the crew, from the captain down to the cabin boy are full of pluck and muscle and sail out with confidence, THE JOURNAL wishes them success and a prosperous voyage.

Levi Myers was in on Tuesday feeling good because he had just sold a load of his wheat at the Fisher mill for 66 cents per bushel. Levi says the proper thing for farmers to do is to sell their wheat just as soon as the price gives them a fair profit. "Last fall," said he, I sold at $1.12. Everybody told me I was a fool not to hold such a fine sample as I had for $1.50. Well, I needed the money and I thought that $1.12 gave me a good profit so I sold. Lucky too for, as you know, wheat did not reach $1.50 nor even the dollar mark again. I contend that farmers should not be tempted to speculate as my experience is that in nine cases out of ten they lose more than they gain. And especially so if a farmer has to go and borrow money at ten per cent and like enough pay ten dollars or so bonus besides." There is food for reflection in what Mr. Myers says.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Henry Wight:—Now you can begin to see the result of the dilatory policy in the matter of the bonds for our new road. Had that matter been promptly attended to the road could have just as well been here now as not, and we should have been experiencing a bit of a boom. Now, the probability is that the road reaches us so near cold weather as to freeze out any boom that may have sprouted. I have another good item in pickle for you.

E. M. Walsh:—The new road will pay particular attention to the matter of drainage, and the ditches and culverts will be constructed with that view. Some boxes, thought to have been sufficiently large have been condemned and larger ones ordered to replace them. Piles will be driven wherever necessary to prevent washouts, and you may say that the ditches will be made adequate for the purpose of good drainage.

John C. Wells:—Crookston is one of the finest cities I have seen in this upper country, and I firmly believe has a bright future. Since my last visit your improvements have been many and permanent. Your business exceeds that of any city I have seen in the Northwest and with your new road now being built I can see no reason why Crookston will not soon become the leading city of the Northwest.

C. M. Palmer:—No, I have not fully decided to go into the pork packing factory. The matter is yet under consideration and with a proper spirit of encouragement from your citizens I may invest. But I wish to say to you that the city should give that oat-meal mill far more encouragement. Mr. Dobson has worked hard and spent big money to build up that institution and made it a success so far, where many a man of less resolute spirit would have failed entirely. In the start the way such machinery is hedged about would have discouraged and disheartened many a man, and then the thousand and one other complications attendant makes it a matter of wonder to me that Mr. D. pushed the matter as he did; and now that he is obliged to send away for his oats to grind he is entitled to, and should receive all the encouragement you have in the shop. Rival towns knew all this and have tried to get the plant away from Crookston.

D. E. Hatlestad:—No sir, the city is not ahead of the country as you hear some say. The trouble is she is not up to it. Why? Because there is not care enough taken to provide a good and sufficient market. How do I make that out? Why, the fact that middlemen can and do buy butter and eggs and other country produce here and ship them to outside markets at big profits shows it. The farmer should have the benefit of every cent there is in his produce, and when a city gives him that then will that city prosper.

N. K. Hubbard, of Fargo, was in the city last week looking after his property interests here. Mr. Hubbard is one of the earliest settlers in this country. Beginning with the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad from the N. P. Junction westward, he with a Mr. Raymond and a Mr. Allen, established stores at every prominent point on the road as far west as Fargo. Mr. Hubbard eventually purchased a portion of the Bly interests in real estate in this city and owns considerable property here now. He has become a bright and shining light in the new state of Dakota and is somewhat of a politician himself, though it is whispered about that he does not love the truly "great" (and good) Major Edwards, (of the Fargo Argus) not just one little bit. Fargoans have learned to look for the millenium when the Major and N. K. lie down together in one little political bed.

W. S. Haverland, was in the city yesterday from Emerodo, D. T., returning last night on the freight.

Proceedings of City Council.

ADJOURNED MEETING, HELD SEPTEMBER 20th, 1889.

President Watts in the chair.

Members present—Aldermen Lally, Steenerson, Bjoin, Buhn, Jennings and Marlette.

The communication from S. L. Dobson and Robert Stanton requesting rebate on taxes was referred to the finance committee.

Moved by Alderman Steenerson, seconded by Alderman Buhn, that the most southerly electric light on Broadway be removed to the intersection of Second street with Broadway. Carried.

Moved by Alderman Jennings, seconded by Alderman Lally, that the fire ordinance, as amended, be put on its final passage. Ayes, Aldermen Watts, Lally, Steenerson, Bjoin, Marlette, Buhn and Jennings. Nays, none.

On motion council adjourned.

JOHN PATERSON,
City Clerk.

The Railroad Commissioners.

Railroad commissioners Gibbs and Williams accompanied by Secretary Bixby and Chief Inspector A. C. Clauson arrived by special at 12 o'clock on Thursday last and took dinner at the Commercial. At one o'clock they repaired to the headquarters of the fire department in McKinnon block where a meeting had been appointed to listen to any complaints that might be made. At two o'clock they started for Fosston. The engineer had orders to run to the switch 14 miles east and there await the Fosston train. The Fosston train did not reach that point until 4 o'clock which was the cause of the commissioners missing the appointed time of all of their appointments on that line.

SEC. 2. No person shall erect, or attempt to erect, rebuild, raise or enlarge, within said fire limits, or remove from one place to another, within said fire limits, or from any place outside to the inside of said limits, any building or structure, unless he shall have first presented his application in writing for a permit to build, rebuild, raise, enlarge or remove such building, to the City Council, containing a specification of the dimensions of the walls and foundations, the number of stories, the location, number, size and capacity of the chimneys, a description of the supports over doorways, the material used in the construction thereof and the covering of the roof, nor unless he shall have obtained the written permission of the mayor, to build, rebuild, raise or remove according to such specifications as presented, or thereafter amended or altered by the council.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Mayor and City Council to examine and decide upon all applications for such permits without unusual delay, and after any permit shall be granted, the mayor or acting mayor, as the case may be, shall give to the applicant a permit in writing, under his hand and countersigned by the city clerk, which permit shall be numbered and refer to the specification contained in the application. Except that in no case shall any such permit be issued or granted for any wooden or frame building or structure, unless such building or structure be provided with solid brick or stone outside walls complete, or with other material or substance for such walls equally fire proof, and be also provided with tin, metal or other fire proof covering for the roof or roofs thereof.

SEC. 4. Any person who shall erect, enlarge, rebuild, raise or remove, or who shall assist or attempt to erect, enlarge, rebuild, raise or remove any building or structure in the fire limits, in violation or non-observance of the provisions of the foregoing sections, shall be punished by a fine of not less than five dollars ($5.00) or more than one hundred dollars ($100.00,) and costs of prosecution, or by imprisonment (if such fine shall not be paid forthwith) not less than thirty (30) days nor more than ninety (90) days or until discharged by due course of law.

SEC. 5. All buildings, additions, enlargements or structures hereafter erected, repaired, removed or built in said fire limits in violation of this ordinance, are hereby declared public nuisances and shall be abated by the chief of police upon the order of the mayor.

No stove pipe shall be conducted through any roof or outer wall of any buildings in this city but they shall be conducted into proper chimneys of brick or stone, and no stove pipe shall be conducted through any partition, floor or ceiling constructed wholly or partly of wood, in any building, unless it be conducted through a double funnel or crock with an air space of not less than one (1) inch, or through inlaid brick, and no stove shall be set up in any building unless it be placed not less than four (4) inches from the floor on which it stands, and twelve (12) inches from any wall or partition constructed wholly or partly of combustible materials, and all stoves or furnaces shall be set on sheet of metal or bed of brick laid in mortar, sand or on ground and any owner, lessee or occupant of any building in the city who shall put up, set up or cause to be set up any stove or stove pipe, or shall continue or permit any stove or stove pipe to be in condition contrary to the foregoing provisions in any such building shall be punished by a fine of not less than five ($5) nor more than twenty-five ($25) dollars and cost of prosecution, or by imprisonment for not less than ten (10) nor more than thirty (30) days.

SEC. 7. No person shall deposit or stack any hay, straw, shavings or other easily combustible material in any yard or lot in open air at a less distance than one hundred (100) feet from any building in this city, or allow the same to remain in such locality for more than forty-eight (48) hours after this ordinance shall take effect. Any owner or person having control over any such material, who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, shall be punished by a fine of not less than three ($3.00) nor more than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars and costs of prosecution.

SEC. 12. No refined petroleum or kerosene oils shall be kept for sale or stored within the corporate limits of this city, the fire test of which shall be less than one hundred and ten (110) degrees Fahrenheit, said test shall be determined by an authorized inspector using approved instruments for that purpose. Merchants Carnival.

The ladies of the Congregational church society are making preparations for a grand carnival to be given as soon in October as is possible to get ready, probably about the 15th. Among the attractions is an elegant silk bed-quilt that some one will be the lucky owner of. The ladies deserve and should receive a generous patronage.

The value of irrigation has received an unusual endorsement the past season, and the lesson taught by the experience gained may well be heeded. The American Agriculturist, with its usual clear-sightedness, in the October issue, presents the advantages of irrigation in humid climates and urges its importance on the attention of Eastern farmers especially. The advantages gained by irrigation are summed up by the American Agriculturist as follows: There is absolute freedom from drouth; with a properly regulated system of watering, all crops will yield a better average; all water contains fertilizing elements which increase the productiveness of the soil.

VALUE OF ALFALFA.

Something of its History and its Character and Uses.

St. Paul Globe.

The State Agricultural College of Colorado, situated at Fort Collins, has just issued a pamphlet on alfalfa, its growth, composition, digestibility, etc. The pamphlet will prove very valuable to those interested in the subject. It says:

The perennial plant known and called alfalfa by the Spanish, and by the French lucerne, has been grown extensively and for many years in the Southwest under the name of Chilian, or California clover.

The Romans brought it from Media in 470 B. C., hence its generic name.

It was introduced into Mexico in the time of the conquest; thence into South America, and from Chili into California in 1854, where it has been grown more successfully and in greater quantities than elsewhere. It found its way into California early in the sixties, having been raised for the first time in the state in the Platte valley, near Denver.

It flourishes at all altitudes below 7,000 feet, and in all soils that will produce other good crops. Sandy and clay loams are best adapted to its habits. Soils underlaid with shale, or hardpan, are not conductive to its successful growth, inasmuch as the roots of the plant must penetrate the subsoil until they find moisture. Where surface drainage is good, and the land not too wet or too alkaline, it readily secures a stand, and the first season makes a crop of one or two tons per acre—often without any irrigation in this arid climate.

It is the most tenacious of all forage plants, enduring more harsh treatment, more dry weather, heat and cold, after making a stand, than any of the others. It is, indeed, "a child of the sun," defying the hottest suns, the driest soils and the greatest variations of temperature—in fact, it keeps fresh and green while all other plants dry up and die around it.

Its growth is exceedingly rapid. In some soils and under certain conditions it makes a growth of thirty to forty-five inches a month, and in some localities a cutting every month in the summer season. The first cutting is ready about the middle of June—just before blooming—and is considered the best for working teams, inasmuch as it contains more fattening elements, and hence is a stronger food. The second crop is cut in July, and the third in September, and if the fourth is cut, it is ready in October. The second crop, and particularly the third, is better for milch cows, and animals that do not work, inasmuch as it is more succulent, contains fewer coarse stems and is more easily masticated.

The feeding value, as seen in the tables given, is clearly demonstrated in practical stock feeding. No other clover, grass or forage plant compares with it, or contains a greater per cent of protein substances.

Horses grow fat on it alone; cattle make fat, flesh and milk; sheep thrive and are perfectly healthy when fed on it; and even hogs, when pastured on it, need no other food.

The preparation of the soil for sowing alfalfa is about the same as for clover, or other small seeds; if quite moist, good stands are secured on the raw sod merely by harrowing or drilling the seed. The condition of the soil is everything, in rapid and successful germination. Being a rapid grower, and very succulent, it requires a large amount of moisture to start it successfully and keep it growing until well rooted, as when once rooted it is safe.

How to Tell a Good Horse.

Medical Classics: Unless a horse has brains you can't teach him. See that tall bay there, a fine-looking animal, fifteen hands high. You can't teach that horse anything. Why? Well, I'll show you a difference in heads, but have a care of his heels. Look at the brute's head, that rounding nose, that tapering forehead, that broad, full place below the eyes. You can't trust him. That's an awful good mare; as true as the sun. You can see breadth and fullness between the ears and eyes. You couldn't hire that mare to act mean or hurt anybody. The eye should be full, and hazel is a good color. I like a small, thin ear, and want a horse to throw his ears well forward. Look out for the brute that wants to listen to all the conversation going on behind him. The horse that turns back his ears till they almost meet at the points, take my word for it, is sure to do something wrong.

See that straight elegant face. A horse with a dishing face is cowardly, and a cowardly brute is usually vicious. Then I like a square muzzle, with large nostrils, to let in plenty of air to the lungs. For the under side of the head, a good horse should be well cut under the jowl, with jawbones broad and wide apart under the throttle. The next thing to consider is the build of the animal. Never buy a long-legged, stilty horse. Let him have a short, straight back, and a straight rump, and you've got a gentleman's horse. The withers should be high, and the shoulders well set back and broad, but don,t get them too deep in the chest. The forleg should be short. Give me a pritty straight, hind-leg, with the hock low down, short pastern joints, and a round, mulish foot. There are all kinds of horses, but the animal that has these points is almost sure to be sightly, graceful, good-natured and serviceable.

Ensilage.

Hon. L. S. Coffin, well known as one of the most practical men and successful farmers of Iowa, has been experimenting with silos and ensilage. He says in the Farmer and Stock Breeder: "It is now clearly proven that wooden silos above ground are better than those of stone or brick with cement sides and bottoms, and that the silage stored in these wooden and cheaper ones is better and sweeter. All that is necessary is air-tight walls, no matter how built. I have a silo in my barn 12 by 15 and 15 feet deep. This is built with studding, boarded with rough boards on the inside; over this is put tarred building paper and again boarded over, thus making two thicknesses of inch board with paper between. This being in the basement of my barn I set the cutter on the floor above and as the corn runs through it is dropped into the silo below. This little silo will hold about 50 tons of cut up green corn, fodder and all. I can raise this 50 tons easily on three acres of ground, and this ensilage will feed as much stock for the same time as the hay from the usual 12 acres of meadow. Besides this, if the stock are cows in milk they will give as much milk and make as yellow, nice butter and as much of it as if on fine pasture. It is also the best feed for calves and young stock I have ever found. My observation and experience go to show that one can prepare to store up winter feed with silos as cheaply as he can store hay in barns (and that is the only economical way) for the same amount of stock."

DEVELOPING A MINE.

Work Already Under Way on the New Duluth and Winnipeg Mines.

Duluth Herald;

A large force of miners is at work stripping and developing the Griffin party's iron property on the line of the Duluth and Winnipeg road. Certain contracts have been entered into between the owners and the railroad company whereby this work is to be carried on at once, and the mines fitted for the early production and spipping of ore.

When the road is built in to the mines and the developing is far enough along to permit free mining, the mining company guarantees to ship "a train a day" of first-class ore to Duluth. While a train a day is no great quantity of ore, it is good enough to begin on. And it will necessitate the construction of ore docks at Duluth. There are a number of other iron properties in the west end of the Vermillion tributary to the line of this road which will be developed in a short time, owners only waiting to see what success the Griffin party may have before beginning active work. Wealthy Duluth pine land men, such as O. T. Higgins and F. R. Webber, are interested in iron lands along the road. The Duluth and Winnipeg expects to get a very large business from these mines and to increase the importance of Duluth as an iron-ore shipping and manufacturing point very greatly.

MAJ. MERRILL'S TONGUE.

His Talk About Tanner was "Not For Publication."

BOSTON, Sept. 23.—Insurance Commissioner Merrill is the maddest man in Boston just now, and all because of the famous interview credited to him relative to Tanner.

"The article," said he, "is practically a lie from end to end. It is the first time in all my experience that my confidence was ever betrayed by a newspaper man. The facts are that I sat with my back to my desk here talking with two Grand Army men the other day when a young man entered the room and dropped into a chair. I remarked that I soon would be at leisure and conducted my conversation in an undertone. I know now that he must have heard most of it. I was explaining to them why the President found it necessary to dismiss Tanner. Soon they went out, and the young man remembered that he, too, was interested in this pension matter and would like to talk it over. I told him I did not care to talk for publication. I only conversed with him for a few minutes. As he rose to go I again cautioned him that what I had said was not for publication, and my remark was heard by two other newspaper representatives who had meanwhile entered. Then he published a column and a half, much of which I never said. In the first place he was an eavesdropper. Then he started off with the statement that the President had offered me the pension commissionership and I had about concluded to accept. He put in a good many things that he himself said to me and to which I said neither yes nor no. A sample of his misstatements was this:

"I said Tanner deserved sympathy because of the loss of his legs; that he never slept without opiates; that I myself had sat up with him nights because he could not sleep; that he never saw a minute's freedom from pain; and every year his stumps had to be cut open and the nerves teated; so that it was a wonder to me his sufferings had not made him crazy. He quoted me as saying Tanner had drunk so much whisky that he had lost his head. That is one illustration of the way I was used throughout the interview. As a result I telegraphed to Maj. Warner requesting him to immediately withdraw my name from further consideration by the President."

Tanner's Resignation.

Toledo Blade.

It was a charge brought with truth againt Grover Cleveland, during his Presidency, that where he made an appointment which was afterward shown to be an unfit one, he lacked the moral courage to rectify the mistake, but retained his appointee despite his unfitness. The case of Pension Commissioner Tanner shows that President Harrison is not that sort of a man. He has rectified what has been shown to be an unwise appointment.

Corporal Tanner is a very popular man, whose social qualities have endeared him to a very wide circle of personal friends in the ranks of his old comrades in arms; and he was recommended for the position of Pension commissioner by the strongest backing among influential Republicans of any of those named as aspirants. His appointment was urged, too, on what may be termed sentimental grounds—that he was a representave veteran of the rank and file, "the boys who carried muskets," and that they should be recognized, as well as the men who bore commissions.

This idea, and personal friendship for the wounded veteran, seems to have obscured, in the minds of those who pressed Tanner's appointment upon the President, the weightier question as to his executive ability and business capacity. The position of pension commissioner is a peculiarly responsible one, its duties demanding for their successful conduct the highest abilities. The incumbent must possess the qualities that go to make up a successful commander. He must be able to insure strict obedience in his subordinates, be a good judge of evidence, not capable of having his judgment swayed by his sympathies and personal friendship, and gifted with that rare discretion which puts into daily business practice the old adage that "speech is silvern, but silence is golden."

There is not the slightest doubt of Mr. Tanner's personal honesty and strict integrity, his devotion to the public interest and his desire to have the laws, so far as it was his duty to administer them, carried out in a just and proper spirit; but there is unfortunately no doubt but that he lacked the necessary qualities that would enable him to discharge his duties properly and by proper means, and that his executive abilities were not up to the mark of the peculiarly responsible duties of the position. Mr. Tanner showed, to the sorrow of his friends, that he did not realize that he was a subordinate of the Interior department, under the direct supervision and control of the secretary; he has failed to remember the rule of proper obedience to his superior officer, which should have been plain to him from his army experience.

Not only has his disregard of Secretary Noble's wishes and instructions led to constant trouble in the administrative department, but his judgment has been at fault in pension matters. He has been too easily controlled by personal friendship, and by his intense sympathy for the veterans, and thus been imposed upon by unworthy claimants and claim agents. He has been foolishly eager to resent every criticism that has been made by the Democratic press and others, and his indiscreet utterances have been annoying and embarrassing to the administration. Personally, President Harrison has the most friendly feelings toward Mr. Tanner; but a due regard for the good of the public service demanded that he should ask the corporal's resignation from a position which experience has shown him to be unfitted; and Benjamin Harrison is not the man to shirk a plain duty, even though it be distasteful personally.

The resignation of Mr. Tanner has not been forced or influenced by Democratic ridicule and abuse; nor is Mr. Tanner in any sense a "martyr." He could not discharge his difficult duties satisfactorily, and the change is simply a matter of business, as would be the retirement of an inaccurate book-keeper in a mercantile house. Nor does it mean any change in the well known policy of the administration to do full justice to every veteran, and to execute the pension laws in a spirit of broad and enlightened humanity toward deserving claimants. The administration cannot afford to relax proper discipline among its subordinates, nor allow unbusinesslike methods to prevail in an important bureau. Personally there is much to admire in Mr. Tanner; but his case comes under a homely old proverb current in some parts of Ohio, which declares that one "is a very good man, but he can't keep a hotel." Mr. Tanner is an excellent gentleman, but he lacks the business qualifications necessary to success in a responsible executive office.

A Narrow Escape.

A Hill Nearly Toboggans 100,000 People into the Lake.

Minneapolis Journal.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Sept. 24.—The startling information is made public that a great catastrophe, during the national encampment, was averted by a mere chance. The sloping hillside at Juneau Park, where 100,000 people were seated on the night of the sham battle, was moved six inches. Had it not been for the stone roadbed of the railway at the foot of the hill, the whole side of the bluff would have slipped off into the lake carrying the people with it. The ground at the bottom of the hill is bulged, and at the top there is a deep fissure where the sod and earth have been torn apart. Before the seats were erected many civil engineers had doubts about the safety of the bank, as much of it consisted of made ground.

The Globe Called.

Mankato Free Press: The St. Paul Globe says a democratic paper has just followed the example of the New York Tribune of four years ago and prepared a list of President Harrison's appointees "who have collided with criminal statutes and good morals." The Globe made a great mistake in not publishing the list. The Globe doesn't even hint at its size as compared with the famous list of the Tribune, where burglars vie with forgers for the highest recognition by Grover.

Why the Show was no Good.

Midway News: That was a great stock show Senator Durant saw in his dream. It comprised the entire meat product of Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Montana and the Dakotas, to say nothing of the bulls of Bashan, the golden calf of the Israelites and Mary's little lamb. But Brother Heatwole wouldn't give a five line notice to such a show. It didn't have a single Minneapolis hog.

English and American Prices.

The Chicago Inter Ocean

Mr. Pettifer is secretary of the British Workmen's Association; he is an electroplate maker by trade, and he has worked at his trade in the United States and in England. On the 19th day of March last he addressed a meeting of English workmen at Cheadle, and he tried to explain to them that Free Trade meant low wages and Protection high wages. He also strove to prove that high wages do not necessarily involve high prices for what the wages of labor will purchase. Among other things he said to his hearers:

"A sovereign ($5) will buy more tea, coffee, lamp oil, flour, meat, and butter in America than in England. It will buy as much cotton sheeting, shirting, printed or plain calico, and boots. There is a wonderful thing about the boots I have on. They cost me $3 in Boston, not in a little slopshop but in an ordinary good shop. The average wages in my trade are $3 per day in Boston and $1.50 in London; so that it takes two days' wages to buy my boots in London and only one day's wages in Boston."

Our Free Trade friends are invited to reply to Mr. Pettifer. They are not requested to say that "the best thought of the country tends toward free trade," or that "all the scholarship and argument is on the side of free trade," or to indulge in any kind of sebaceous evasion. They are requested to explain to the workmen of America why they should desire a free trade policy so long as a protectionist policy is enabling them to buy more meat, more coal oil, more tea, more coffee, more flour, and as much clothing with one day's wages as can be bought with two days' wages in the country which has made the largest and most successful experiment in free trade. We are waiting to hear from Calhounists, Cobdenists, and Clevelandists, or all of them, as to this matter.

False Free Trade Statistics.

The Philadelphia American.

During the last political campaign lying statistics were circulated, which represented the western farmers as hopelessly bankrupt under the protective policy. It was alleged that the mortgages on the farms of Illinois alone aggregated $620,000,000; and that the farms of Ohio, Michigan, and other states were equally burdened. Since that time there have been official investigations as to the total of registered mortgages, and in Illinois it is found to amount to $123,738,098, of which fully one-fifth is the balance of purchase money secured by mortgage. So in other states it is shown that the total of these mortgages, so far from eating up the value of the farms, is only a fraction of that value. And, as Mr. Edward Atkinson has shown, there has been a heavy reduction of interest, so that instead of 10 per cent. the farmers now pay but little over 6 or 7. This is because the protectionist policy has kept the money of the nation at home, and even has added by importation of gold to the natural increase from the product of our mines, while the payment of the debt has set free money invested in that for investment in mortgages and other securities.

To replace this exploded figment Mr. Thomas G. Sherman, in an address delivered in Portland, Oregon, asserted that it could be demonstrated by statistics which are undisputed that some hundred thousand people accumulated three-fifths of all the wealth which is saved annually in this country, and that in thirty years these hundred thousand might become possessed of three-fifths of the wealth of the American nation. Everybody knows that there are no such statistics in existence, and that Mr. Jim Fisk's former attorney is cooking up his case as distinctly as in his old applications to Judge Barnard and Cardoza on behalf of the Eril Railroad management.

RAISE MORE WHEAT.

The Agricultural Editor of the Des Moines Register has Experiences and Views.

There is a general move among millers and wheat speculators to induce the farmers of Iowa to raise more wheat. This is a subject that needs a little plain ventilating. The wheat business is as completely controlled by combinations as is the beef, the pork, the sugar, or the whisky, etc., and millers may as well make their calculations now as any future time, that the sensible farmers of Iowa will not increase the wheat production until there is some radical changes in the treatment of the wheat market. There must not only be an increase in the price of wheat compared with the price of flour, but the millers must make a better grade of flour so as to be able to pay better prices for wheat. Farmers cannot afford to raise first-class wheat for fourth-class mills.

Look at the situation. The average price of wheat at Des Moines, and we believe it is a good average for the state, is 60 cents per bushel. The price of flour is $2.80 to $2.90 for 100 pounds wholesale. Thus they charge the wholesale purchaser the price of four and three-quarters bushels of wheat for 100 pounds of flour. And the consumer is charged the price of five bushels, or the price of ten bushels for an old-fashioned barrel of flour. Is this legal swindling or only old-fashioned extortion? Wheat ought to bring as much as the price of all of the flour that is in it. The bran and shorts are ample to pay for manufacturing, and when flour is $3 per hundred wheat ought to bring at the mills $1.20 per bushel, just double what it does now. Counting that there are forty pounds of flour in a bushel of wheat, that leaves twenty pounds of bran and shorts. This is worth at wholesale $14 per ton. This would give the miller 14 cents for manufacturing each bushel of wheat, but if he gets his wheat at 60 cents he gets at present twenty pounds of flour and fourteen of bran out of each bushel for his toll, which is 74 cents.

But some will contend that there is not forty pounds of flour in a bushel of spring wheat. We have not been in the milling business for some years, and are not as well posted as the millers of the present day. But fifty years ago, when we were interested in milling when machinery was not near as good as now, and when the bolt was run by hand, when the wheat was good, a barrel of flour was obtained from a little less than five bushels of wheat, but five bushels was considered an average. Now, with their far better machinery they want ten bushels of wheat to make a barrel of flour, as ten bushels at 60 cents just costs as much as 200 weight of flour. But rashly suppose that it does take ten bushels to make a barrel, which would be twenty pounds of flour to the bushel, which nobody believes, then the miller would have left of offal 400 pounds of bran and shorts, worth at wholesale $2.80, which the miller would get for manufacturing 200 weight of flour. But this is nonsense for any miller to claim any such thing. But the truth is, the millers are grossly swindling the farmers in giving 60 cents for wheat when flour is retailed at $3.

No wonder they are clamorous for the farmers of Iowa to raise more wheat. We took to mill at Marshalltown over thirty years ago forty bushels of good wheat, weighing 2,400 pounds. The wheat was manufactured into flour, shorts and bran, and when the miller had tolled it, the flour, shorts and bran delivered to us weighed just 1,062 pounds. We went home thirty miles with a lump in our throat, and it wasn't Adam's apple, either. We recollect the amount, as we put it down then in our books, and refer to it now to be exact. In this case the miller took 1,338 and gave us 1,062. And yet this is no worse, and not much better than millers are doing to day. But they do it in a more roundabout way, so the farmers cannot see it. But they do see that it does not pay to raise wheat, and so long as the millers' combination conducts business in the present way it is useless for them to talk to intelligent farmers about raising more wheat. The millers of Iowa, to our certain knowledge, have held regular yearly conclaves at Des Moines for ten years to regulate their business. And they have regulated it, so as to stop almost the wheat-raising business. And the farmers will never resume it until millers abandon their combinations, and until twice as much is paid for wheat as now.

This will probably make some of the little, old, hardscrabble mills, not superior to the old-fashioned "corn crackers" to whine a little. But nothing but plain words will release the grapple which the millers have upon the farmers' throats.

Farmers, Play Fair.

Prairie Farmer.

It has been well said that man is a parasite of the cow. Her flesh and her milk enter into our diet, and on her health hinges our own sanative condition. Little do we realize how much the minor disorders of a milch animal contribute to human ill-health. A cow suffering from some feverish malady superinduced by close, unhealthy stable quarters, or stagnant drinking water yields with her milk-flow minute disease bacteria that taint the fluid, and ultimately corrupt human blood. A cheesemaker or buttermaker manipulating large quantities of milk and cream every day of the season, often discovers traces of putrid taint by the olfactory test in the product under his manufacturing care. The deplorable custom is however, extant, of rejecting from farmers none but the most virulent messes, and so the insidious poison is allowed to creep in, and leavening the whole lump, scattering its seeds broad cast. Everybody is greatly shocked because it has been discovered that annatto paste is sometimes prepared with urine, but I do not consider this much more despicable than palming off impure and unclean milk on an unsuspecting public.

Milch cattle are often afflicted with tumerous excresences and blood disorders. The milk is so immediately connected with the blood that the quality of the one gauges the other; hence it is a moral crime, if no worse, to sell milk drawn from animals showing any permanent ill health defects, or temporary maladies. The producer is a transgressor in this way: He has, say, a dairy of twenty cows, and the cream that their milk yields is daily gathered up by the manufacturer's wagon. One or more animals in his herd have gargety teats, or tumorous blood affections. When he reserves a portion for family use he does not save it from the common mess, but is careful to save it from the yield of one of the healthiest cows. The residue, good bad and indifferent, is turned over to the mercy of the buttermaker, and the charity of the public. We do not intend this for a sweeping accusation, but there are so many of such mercenary transactions going on that they call for condemnation from honest dairymen. The spirit of the times is tending toward worth for the money, and those who run the race fair and square will win the biggest stakes.

Work at the big sawmill was suspendid last week for a short time. The crew mostly went to Grand Forks to work awhile in the mill there.

D. H. Beecher and wife returned last week from a pleasant visit to friends in New York and Massachusetts. Mr. B. stopped over one train in the city.

I. K. Messelt was in from Winger last week. Says that crops in the Thirteen vary—some good some poor. He says that he raised 32 bushels per acre on 20 acres of breaking.

J. M. Hanson, St. Hilaire's genial fruit merchant was in the city over Sunday. He came down to stock up for the fall's trade. He says he is having a fine trade and appears to be deserving of it.

The remains of Mrs. O. Sargeant were brought to the city on Saturday last and buried on Sunday. Mr. Sargeant who formerly resided here had been a resident of Grand Forks but a few weeks.

Henry Wight was around the streets on Saturday at least two feet higher. When asked the reason he said "14 pounds of masculine humanity at our house yesterday—that's two feet more ain't it?" All are doing well.

Barnesville Review: Mr. John Eldridge has purchased the stock, furniture, etc., of the Depot Hotel from John F. Ohmer, and will conduct this popular hostelry in the future. Mr. Eldridge has had large experience in the hotel business, and we feel sure will make a success of the Depot Hotel.

A. E. Sawyer was up from Faribault last week looking up his business interests here. He was about on the streets Saturday pricing fruits and remarked that fruits were fully as cheap here as at Faribault. Some were cheaper. He says Crookston is as good a city as can be found in the Northwest.

The governor has appointed as one of the delegates at large to the National Farmer's Congress to be held at Montgomery, Ala., from Nov. 13th to 15th, Capt. H. W. Donaldson, of Kittson County, and to represent the Fifth Congressional District, W. J. Bodkin, of Clay. Good appointments.

Notwithstanding the bad weather this fall farmers have made commendable progress with their work, stacking, etc., and there is now but little grain in shock. Some, who intended to have threshed from the shock were obliged to abandon the plan and stack their grain. We think they will be the gainers as the grain will be all the brighter and better for sweating in the stack and the cost of threshing will no doubt be less.

Farm Loans. Lowest Rates. No Bonus.

C. A. Chiniquy came up from Chicago last Friday for a few day's visit on business and pleasure.

Mrs. H. E. Cooke last week received news of the serious illness of her sister at Vermontville, Eaton County, Mich., and left on last evening's train. She expects to be gone until Nov. 1st.

Contractor Long was up on Saturday busily looking the ground over for the best point of entrance for the road to the city. The line is now definitely located as far as the east end of Robert street.

Dr. Ames returned to Minneapolis from his European trip and was met by a large crowd of his fellow-townsmen. He brought his mouth back with him. In an interview with a reporter before reaching Minneapolis he managed to so enrage the Irish population that they would have nothing to do with the big parade, and in attempting to correct it afterward he made a bad matter worse. The gubernatorial bee still seems to be buzzing in his bonnet.

Miss Emma Veronneau returned on Monday morning from a visit to Chicago, where she visited all of the leading millinery houses to post up on the latest styles in trimmings, and while there purchased a fine large stock for Mrs. E. E. Bangs', millinery emporium on Second street. Miss V. is a thorough artist in her profession, and as she is thoroughly conversant with the latest styles it is not necessary for ladies to go to Chicago for stylish hats. Mrs. Bangs' establishment is now ready for inspection and she invites a call.

About 8:30 on Monday evening a team attached to a heavy lumber wagon took a spin from Main street to the old county bridge on Broadway, where they were stopped without damage. A pedestrian, crossing from Herb's corner to the Scan. Am. bank corner but not yet out of the way was unceremoniously caused to take a tumble to himself in the middle of the road. He let out a yell that would have done credit to a Comanche Indian then picked himself up out of the dirt and shambled off seemingly none the worse for the encounter.

R. J. Montague informs us that the C., D. & N. R. R. has bought nearly all of the lots along south Robert street, from Ald. Jerome's to the bridge and that the depot will be temporarily located just across the bridge, on the right as you go east. From what we have learned of the plans of the company we are led to the belief that the coming of the new road is fraught with more significance than many now believe. If our information is correct our citizens will begin to realize ere another twelve month that they have builded far wiser than they knew when they secured this line, and it will be worth many times its cost.

While going west on Thursday last Conductor Casper Sands noticed two young fellows fooling with a 38 revolver and asked them if the gun was loaded. They said it was not. Just then the gun gave the lie to that answer by going off, the ball striking a man in the seat facing them in the left hand going through that into his clothing. The man was taken to Minot and placed under the care of a surgeon and is now doing nicely. Casper asked the young fellows how much money they had. The shootest had two dollars and Casper took one of that, the owner of the revolver had ten of which Casper took five and adding ten to it he went through the train and raised $66 for the sufferer. The young fellows gave their names as E. W. Perry, Tokoa, Mont., and J. H. Pollenger, Chinook, Mont.

Wabasha Herald: The many friends in this city of Mr. Frank Netzer, of St. Paul, will be pleased to learn that he has been thoroughly exonerated by the American Express Company, and that he has been reinstated and again taken into the employ of the company. About a year ago Mr. Netzer was in the employ of the Express Company as route agent between St. Paul and Fargo. A package containing something over $1,000 was missed and the responsibility rested between three employes, one of whom was Mr. Netzer. A vigilant search was instituted, but the missing money could not be found. Finally the three agents were discharged on the supposition that one of the three had purloined the package. Since that time the whereabouts of the money has been discovered and Mr. Netzer has been entirely exonerated and returned to his position. This little piece of intelligence is decidedly gratifying to his friends; while done of them doubted for a moment his innocence the discovering of the package relieves him from a very embarrassing situation and sets him right before the world.

The new road goes right through T. B. McManus' residence and cuts a slice off Frank Jerome's front yard.

The depot has now been permanently located on Jerome's addition; the company has secured grounds for a large round house and machine shops and M. R. Brown informs THE JOURNAL that he is still selling lots at the old price and will do so for the next 30 days. Twenty lots sold there by him this week does not look like as though business in real estate was dull, by any means. Now is the time to secure lots before the advent of the road doubles the price.

Marshall County Leader: The train from the south which is due here about 9:30 a. m. according to time card, gets here when it comes if nothing happens. From 11 to 12 o'clock has been the usual time of late. There is not probably another fifty miles of the Manitoba road that is as profitable as the line from Crookston to St. Vincent, but in the absence of any competition compelling them to afford railway facilities, the Manitoba gives us a mixed freight and passenger train once a day at such a time as varying circumstances makes most convenient to them. A united effort should by made by the people of Marshall and Kittson Counties to have the Northern Pacific extend their line north from Crookston on this side of the river. In such an event Stephen would be the best point for the N. P. to cross the M. & M.

That Horse Case.

The Times goes a great ways out of the way to hit Sheriff Paulsrud a vicious dig, when it might, with a very little trouble have ascertained the facts. For some time Mr. Paulsrud has been busy tracing a team that Chas. Thorne had mortgaged to Terry & Collins, said mortgage being now the property of August Walters. Some time in early summer Thorne sold one of the horses and skipped with the other to Grand Forks. The sheriff soon found and nabbed the one sold in Polk County, and went over to Grand Forks, where he learned that Thorne had secured a rig at a livery stable and started for Larimore, (he said.) The sheriff located him at Emerson however, and later learned that he had traded the remaining horse to a livery man at Grafton. Last week, armed with the proper papers, he went to Grafton found his horse secured possession of him and shipped him to Grand Forks by freight. The man from whom the horse was taken caused the sheriff to be detained at Grand Forks to await the arrival of the Grafton sheriff, meanwhile he telegraphed August Walters to come over and identify the horse. Mr. Walters, being sick, sent a man who knew the horse who identified him and brought him to Crookston, where the horse now is in possession of the mortgagee. The following item in relation to the matter we take from the Herald-News and Times of Grafton:

"Some time ago John Ildstad of the Merchants' Hotel, traded for a horse with a fellow from Minnesota, and the animal has been in his possession since then until Monday, when a man arrived in the city—a stranger of respectable mien who made a proposition to Mr. Ildstad to talk horse. Mr. Ildstad acquiesced and the horse in question was brought out for inspection. There was some discussion and the stranger got the horse in his possession nominally and then informed the genial landlord of the Merchants' that he the stranger was sheriff of Polk County, Minnesota, and that he had a mortgage on the horse and proposed to get away with it. Now John Ildstad is not the man to give up his property without what appears to be due process of law and there was trouble promptly, but the stranger got the horse and before Mr. Ildstad could get the machinery of the law in motion the horse was got aboard the freight and started south. The authorities were appealed to and a warrant issued for Sheriff Paulsrud, charging him with grand larceny and the warrant was placed in the hands of Sheriff Olson which resulted in the arrest of the Minnesota sheriff at Grand Forks. He returned with Mr. Olson, waved examination and was placed under $300 bonds to appear at the next term of court. Mr. Paulsrud says that he considered that he obtained peaceable possession of the mortgaged animal and that if he erred in his proceedings it was an error of judgment and is prepared to make good his mistake. The gentleman is spoken of in the highest terms by our sheriff and it is altogether likely that the matter will be made right. In any event Mr. Ildstad is an innocent party and should lose nothing and from his energet manner of looking after his rights it is not likely that he intends being a loser. There is nothing that is more commendable than to get a good move on you when you think your rights are assailed."

These go to Washington.

Those who intend to take in the big doings at Washington are: T. C. Shapleigh, Maj. Mix and daughters, H. H. Dickmann, E. M. Walsh, Tom Morris, A. D. Stephens, Dr. J. H. Thomas and son, Charlie. Maj. Mix expects to be gone a month and Miss Cassie will stay all winter with friends in Washington. The balance will be back about Oct. 15th.

A Sad Death.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Mrs. O. Sargent, whose life had been despaired of for several days, died at an early hour last evening. She had been a great sufferer for several weeks past and but little hope was entertained for her recovery. Everything that could be done was of no avail, and her spirit yielded to the call of the angel and she passed peacefully away. She leaves a babe of four weeks for whose life she gave up her own, and a devoted husband who mourns her loss with deepest sorrow. Mr. and Mrs. Sargent came to Grand Forks from Crookston a few months ago and were comparative strangers here. Mr. Sargent has just completed a neat and comfortable home on Budge avenue, west of the M. & M. depot. The remains will be taken to Crookston for interment.

Returns a Wiser Man.

Last fall, Charlie Klinger, who has one of the finest farms in Polk County, located between the city and Fisher, took it into his head that he had to go to Oregon and nothing would satisfy him until he tried it on. So he rented his place for a year, and taking his mother went. Well, on Monday last he was seen unloading his goods from a box car at the depot having returned a few days since with his mother fully convinced that there is no country west of here equal to Polk County. He will now settle down and be a happy and contented Polk County granger.

Stylish Millinery.

Ladies have you called to see Miss Helen Halverson's assortment of millinery? She has a superb stock in all of the latest novelties, carefully selected by herself from the largest eastern stocks and it is indeed a very exacting taste that cannot be suited. She invites the ladies to call and examine her stock confident of her ability to please her patrons in style, finish and price. All of the very latest styles in trimmings in stock.

Trade Display.

If you wish to combine business and pleasure, and witness a novel and enchanting scene, comprising all the youth and beauty of Crookston, in fantastic attire do not fail to attend the trade carnival at the opera house, on the 17th and 18 of October.

Mr. O. Sergeant, who buried his wife Sunday buried his four weeks old child on Wednesday.

A number of our local nimrods took the field for ducks and geese early this week. Among them were Ald. Jennings, D. E. Hatlestad, Chris Hoch, Andy Locken, Will Cleary and others. They secured a few but Dav. Hatlestad says he merely went along to see if geese were fat enough to kill but found none ripe enough for him to pick. The party shot a dozen geese or so and several ducks. Their hunt was along the Sand Hill River near Beltrami.

Bro. Knappen, of the Fisher Bulletin roasts the State Fair management to the queen's taste in his last issue. What is the good of that so long as the farmers of the state seem to have to depend on St. Paul or Minneapolis from U. S. Senator down. Change the deal and then farmers may get a show. We fail to see how it can be done otherwise.

A contest case, involving a timber culture entry near Euclid, in which Charles Henderson contests the claim of Mrs. Susan McGillis, is on trial before the U. S. Land Office. D. E. Hatlestad is attorney for Mr. Henderson and Ed. George and John McLean most valiantly defend the widow. It is none of our business, but a friendly interest in the welfare of our good-looking but lonesome, friend McLean, leads us to hint the possibility of a change for the better for him. His natural modesty and faint heart would no doubt prompt him to the belief that the lady might not favor his suit but he should take encouragement, for while any single lady might not accept, the good book says "the widow's mite."

Wedding Bells.

On Saturday last Iver A. Krohn, the genial host of the Scandinavian hotel was united for life to Miss Ingeborg Messelt, the Rev. H. Roalquam officiating. In the evening a number of the intimate friends of the bride and groom gathered in and chased the fleeting hours with flying feet 'ayant the twal' or thereabouts. Their many friends unite in wishing the happy couple a long and prosperous life.

It Failed Once.

Upon the arrival of the Glyndon News on Thursday last we looked around—no white horse in sight!

Relics of Departed Greatness.

On Monday afternoon constable G. H. Holt went up to the court house and sold the remains of the late school superintendent, E. F. Elliot, consisting of 1 cutter, 1 table, 1 desk, 1 stove, 3 common chairs and one office chair. The mortgage called for two office chairs, but the janitor, uncle John Ross, appeared and claimed that one of the chairs belonged to the county, so the sale of that particular chair did not transpire.

Minneapolis Tribune: A new candidate has come to the front for the Little Falls postmastership in the person of G Sundell. He is a relative of Congressman Comstock of the Fifth district, and it is reported that he has espoused the cause with considerable zest. Congressman Comstrek, it is said has thus far asked little of the present administration, and this will be made his one particular request. Representative Flynn of Little Falls, it is understood, will be opposed to this appointment, but Mr. Comstock's prestige is too great for him to take much hope of frustrating the plan that has been formulated to boost Mr. Sundell.

Wonder where you got your information? Mr. Comstock endorsed W. M. Fuller for that place and Fuller's appointment was publicly announced almost before the ink on your article was dry.

That New Hotel

You hear about is not an assured success already, but may be if our citizens really want it. While in the city last week Mr. Glasgow intimated very plainly that it could be secured if the sewer was put in on Second street, and if our citizens would give substantial aid to the project. It would not require an overgrown fortune to secure it and would be worth to the city many times its cost.

The World's Exposition.

The Western Rural.

There are only two cities that are strongly bidding for the World's Exposition, which stand the slightest chance of getting it. These are Chicago and New York. So far as the cities themselves are concerned, The Rural does not care a continental, though it is probably a fact that Chicago is the least objectionable to the class of readers that The Rural represents. New York has been the headquarters of most of the conspiracies against the public interests. It is in her Wall street that the people are robbed through stock speculation. If Wall street, and no other place like it, had ever existed, the farmers would not to-day be compelled to pay dividends upon millions of dollars of watered stock. If no such hot bed of conspiracy against the public interests had had a being, our financial policy would have been much more favorable to the people. Nor is the way which New York presents her claims to the exposition very agreeable to the west. New York always assumes to be better than the west. It is there that the expression—The rowdy west, had its origin. Her arguments, or what she calls arguments, in favor of the selection of New York, are largely founded upon the belief, real or pretended, that western people are half barbarian. This sort of assumption is not pleasant to western people, and while Chicago has much to answer for in her treatment of the producer, Chicago is distinctly western in character, in sympathy and in aims.

But the principal reason why The Rural favors the selection of this city for the exposition is the reason that we have stated in a previous issue—it will better accommodate our farmers. Three-quarters of the farmers who wish to visit the exposition would reach Chicago easier and more cheaply than they could reach New York. Our hotel accommodations are much more extensive than New York's, and prices at them would be naturally lower in consequence. In New York a site for the exposition could not be found without going many miles out, and the expense and trouble of reaching it would therefore be considerable. Land can be had directly in Chicago, and within a comparatively short distance from the center of the city, and lastly there is no city on the continent which is favored with more comfortable weather in summer than Chicago is.

But The Rural is further interested in having a complete exhibition of farm products, and right here in the west is the place to insure that. We are an agricultural nation and The Rural desires the world to know that. We are a great rich nation, and when the dukes and the lords and the princes and perhaps the kings come here to the exposition, it is our desire that as they look upon our grain and vegetables and fruit and live stock that they shall realize the fact that our farmers have made the nation what it is; and further we desire to impress our own people and especially the farmer himself with that fact. We believe that the World's Exposition, if held in Chicago, with the magnificent agricultural exhibit which will certainly be made here, will do more than anything else can do to to show the farmers of America their own importance and their national influence, and when farmers fully realize these things, they will the sooner move forward to demand a recognition of their rights. Let us exert what influence we can to insure the location of the exposition in this city.

MONY TO LOAN.

General O. O. Howard has written an article for the young folks who read Wide Awake, which will also interest and enlighten their elders; we refer to the little paper in the October number entitled "How many Indians in the United State?" In the same number Miss Rose Kingsley, Charles Kingsley's daughter, has a valuable contribution about "The Boy who Invented the Telegraph"—Claude Clappe, a little French lad. Mrs. Goddard Orpen in her "Famous Stones" series, gives a very different page of French history in telling the story of "The Diamond Necklace." After excepting Mrs. White's Public School Cooking paper about dainty preparations for invalids, and the kindred one by Mrs. Cavazza about "Sleep Slippers," and Prof. Starr's "Geological Talk," and Mrs. Claflin's "behavior" letter, the remainder of the number is given up to stories, poems and pictures, all of a most entertaining character; notable among the latter is Mr. Bridgman's amusing Court Calendar and the eighteen Prize Nonsense Animals, the most remarkable chapter known of modern natural history. The poems include contributions from Graham R. Tomson, Mrs. Celia Thaxter and Mrs. Whiton-Stone, all at their best. The serials are Margaret Sidney's "Peppers" and Susan Coolidge's "Little Knight of Labor." The short stories, all true ones, are "Patsey at Scotia," by Leigh Young. "Niobe" by Anna H. Wayne, "Salem Gibraltars," by Elisabeth Merritt Gosse, and "Tom the Star Boy," by Miss Risley Seward, the latter a tale of Washington and the Rocky Mountains. Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

Get Your Pay in Advance.

Maj. T. M. Newson in Midway News.

No business in the world is so exacting as that of the editor of a newspaper, whether the journal is published in the country or in the city. No man toils harder or more hours than the editor. No man builds up other men into business more completely than does the editor, and no man gives to the public more gratuitous work than he who from morning until night and from one day through to another, for weeks and months and years, toils on patiently and laboriously, and yet in nine times out of ten he loses hundreds of dollars from these who take his paper and who fail to pay for it. There is only one remedy and that is: Get your pay in advance. It is better for you and better for the subscribers. What little profit is made out of a newspaper is generally lost in amounts which should come in on subscriptions. Let every newspaper in the state adopt the advance payment system, and at the end of the year he will thank his stars that he followed our advice. "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Get your money.

Holstein Records.

Northwestern Agriculturist.

The "hustling" done by the breeders of Holstein-Friesian cattle is remarkable. No sooner is one record in print than another follows surpassing it. And these records are not made by the owners of famous herds, but often by breeders not known out of their own locality, which shows that phenomenal cows are appearing now and then in families of this breed famous for milk and butter production. The last number of the "Holstein-Friesian Register" has a handsome engraving of De Kol 2d, who had made, up to a few days since, the largest butter record of any cow of her breed, thirty-three pounds and six ounces in seven days. Since that date Lady Baker has appeared with a record of over thirty-four pounds, and the end is not yet. It may be said that such records do not mean anything to the practical farmer, which is true, but they mean as much as the records of cows of other breeds. The real test is the product of a herd of cows when fed and milked for profit. But a cow which can be made to produce thirty-three pounds and six ounces of butter in one week must have qualities valuable in a dairy, and if she can pass these qualities down to her calves, the De Kol family must be valuable as the progenitors of dairy cows. The Holstein-Friesian cattle have iron constitutions and American breeders are handling them with great skill. To-day there is not a doubt that better specimens of the breed can be found here than in their native Holland, and the improvement still goes on. Those who breed them believe in them, and will not be satisfied with less than the largest butter records, as well as the largest milk records in the world. The Holstein-Friesian association has led all others in providing for advanced registry in their herd books, where performance is made to supplement pedigree, and where pedigree without performance is not admitted. The breeders of other cattle may well imitate the enterprise of the Holstein-Friesian people who do not stop making records on account of dull times.

Protection for Raw Material.

A. H. Jones in The Philadelphia Manufacturer.

A protective tariff, while adjusted with due reference to revenue, is not for revenue alone, but is intended also to foster and care for home industries, and, to be consistent and honest, should embrace all home industries. It is not designed to protect the manufacturers only—not at all. It is intended to apply to native industries of all kinds.

James Buchanan, in a speech delivered in 1822, explains the character of the protective, or, as it was then called, the American System, in these words, and they are certainly very well expressed:

"What, sir, is the American System? Is it the system advocated by the gentleman from Maine, [Hon. Peleg Sprague,] which would build up one species of domestic industry at the expense of all the rest; which would establish a prohibition and consequent monopoly in favor of the woolen manufacturer, while it denied all protection to the farmer? Certainly not. The American System consists in affording an equal and just legislative protection to all the great interests of the country. It does not distinguish between the farmer who plows the soil in Pennsylvania and the manufacturer of wool in New England. Being impartial it embraces all. * * * I am neither the exclusive advocate of commerce, of manufacturers, nor of agriculture. The American System embraces them all, and I am the advocate of all. * * * It protects all interests; it abandons none; it never arrays one against another."

The theory that protection is to be accorded to those engaged in the final processes only (that is, duties on finished products only) is untenable. The idea of ignoring the claims of those who have labored in preparing the material so as to bring it into proper condition for the closing operations is too absurd and unjust to deserve serious consideration. The notion that anything is a crude or raw material upon which human labor has been bestowed, and to which man's toil has imparted alike by intelligent free traders and protectionists; and no one has handled this point better than has Frederic Bastiat, the eminent French free trader: To argue that wool is a raw material, and that it should therefore be free, is simply a confession of ignorance. It is labor that gives value to wool and woolen yarn as well as to woolen cloth.

Holstein-Friesian Register: The Bollert Brothers of Cassel, Ont., writes under date of August 15th, that their herd of Holstein-Friesians is doing very nicely this summer. The calves, both male and female, are developing finely and give great promise for the future. "Our sales have been very satisfactory this summer. Among others we have sold two very choice heifers, one three and the other two years old, to Mr. W. Muisiner of Port Robinson, Ont., which, by the way, is his third purchase from us; one heifer, one heifer calf, one bull calf to Mr. D. Lindsay, Hageasville. These will make the foundation for a grand herd, as they are from the very best strains. Mr. N. L. Roth got a very choice bull calf to head his herd. The demand for highly bred animals is continually increasing. To satisfy ourselves we weighed the milk of several members of the herd for some time, with the following results: Geldertje gave 7,506 lbs. in four months, an average of 61½ lbs. per day; Emma J. Neptune, a two-year-old heifer, averaged 43½ lbs. for 60 days; Jennie E., 48 lbs. Bonnie Queen 3d, 40 lbs. per day. We think these very gratifying results, as they had just herd care, running out with the rest of the herd day and night, rain or shine, and we are satisfied that every member of the herd would have done equally as well had the milk been weighed. Though our herd is not fitted up for exhibition, we cordially invite interested parties to inspect the entire herd and compare them with the prize animals of other herds. We find it amusing to see some breeders continually writing about the blood of their herds, but when it comes to actual performance they remain silent. Though we are strong believers in blood and high breeding, we think it loses its value if it is not combined with individual excellence and performance. We have placed our standard at 12,000 lbs. per year and will breed only from such cows and their offspring as are capable of producing that and bring a calf within the year. Our testing so far proves that many of them will exceed that mark."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., OCTOBER 3, 1889.

AN ORDINANCE.

FOR THE PREVENTION OF FIRES, ESTABLISHING FIRE LIMITS AND REGULATION OF CONSTRUCTION, REPAIRING AND REMOVING BUILDINGS THEREIN.

The City Council of the City of Crookston do ordain as follows:

SEC. 1. The territory now constituting blocks 1, 2, 16, 17 and all of block 18, west of the center line of said block, in the original townsite of Crookston, and blocks 3, 4, 5, 6, west half of blocks 11, 12 and all of block 13, west of the centre line of said block, in Fletcher & Houston's addition, shall hereafter be known and constituted the fire limits of the city of Crookston.

SEC. 2. No person shall erect, or attempt to erect, rebuild, raise or enlarge, within said fire limits, or remove from one place to another, within said fire limits, or from any place outside to the inside of said limits, any building or structure, unless he shall have first presented his application in writing for a permit to build, rebuild, raise, enlarge or remove such building, to the City Council, containing a specification of the dimensions of the walls and foundations, the number of stories, the location, number, size and capacity of the chimneys, a description of the supports over doorways, the material used in the construction thereof and the covering of the roof, nor unless he shall have obtained the written permission of the mayor, to build, rebuild, raise or remove according to such specifications as presented, or thereafter amended or altered by the council.

SEC. 3. It shall be the duty of the Mayor and City Council to examine and decide upon all applications for such permits without unusual delay, and after any permit shall be granted, the mayor or acting mayor, as the case may be, shall give to the applicant a permit in writing, under his hand and countersigned by the city clerk, which permit shall be numbered and refer to the specification contained in the application. Duplicates of such permits, together with the specifications upon which they are granted thereto attached, shall be filed by the city clerk, in his office, who shall enter in a suitable book to be provided by the city, with an alphabetical index thereto, the name of applicant with number of application.

BREEDING HORSES.

Skill and Judgment Needful, Says the Live Stock Journal.

When a good judge of horses makes a trip through almost any section of the country, and looks at the horses on the farms of that section, he can see that comparatively few farmers have studied the subject of rearing horses sufficiently to enable them to understand what course they should take in breeding them to insure the best results. A man makes up his mind whether he will breed heavy or light horses, and having decided as to that, the expense is, in many cases, the main consideration. He does not appear to understand that the services of a superior horse are worth more than those of one that has neither good breeding nor individual merit to recommend him. The difference in the fees charged may be only a few dollars, and yet he considers he is practicing economy by saying that small sum. His selection is made without regard to whether the horse is suited to the mares, and because defective where they are also deficient, the choice may be the worse that could be made. The owner does not realize this, however, and perhaps is much surprised when the colts do not prove to be equal to what he expected. If he had informed himself by reading, or had consulted some skillful breeder of horses, he would have known that such breeding would result unsatisfactorily.

Another, perhaps, makes convenience the main consideration and chooses the horse that is so located that he can be patronized with the least loss of time. In this way he believes he has effected some saving, while the fact may be that it would have been far more profitable for him had he gone ten times as far. The time and expense required to grow the colt to a saleable age is the same, or nearly so, whether it makes a horse worth $80 or one that will bring double that, and the difference in the selling price pays handsomely for extra time and trouble, should these be required at the outset.

Too many breed in a haphazard way, with no clearly defined purpose in view, as is shown by the vast number of very inferior horses put on the market each year and sold at prices that must leave little or no profit for the breeder. More skill or good judgment are required probably in breeding the lighter class of horses than of raising colts of the draft breeds, for in the case of heavy work horses weight and soundness are the most important considerations, while in the case of driving horses the value is largely dependent upon form, style and speed. While the value of a draft horse is increased by good, prompt action and a well shaped body, still without these he will find a buyer, if he has weight and sound, more readily than the driving horse that is deficient in the qualities named. The increasing use for heavy horses in large cities has made a demand for them that has prompted many farmers to turn their attention to breeding them instead of the lighter class of horses. Skillful breeders claim that they can make more money in raising the latter, but concede that the heavier breeds are more profitable for the man who lacks either the taste or the judgment to raise something better than the inferior stock found on so many farms, especially through the West. There is room for a vast improvement in this direction, with the result of adding materially to the income of the farmer—a point that he has ample reason to consider in these days of low prices for so many products of the farm.

FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts; immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

WHEREAS ZENAPHILE ROCK AND Christina Rock, his wife as mortgagors, did on the 17th day of November A. D. 1886, duly execute and deliver to A. J. McCosh of the County of New York and State of New York as mortgagee, their mortgage bearing date of November ninth A. D. 1886, whereby they mortgaged to said mortgagee the following described lands situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: The northwest quarter of Section nine (9,) Township one hundred and forty-nine (149,) Range forty-three (43) west containing one hundred and sixty acres, to secure the payment of the sum of six hundred dollars with interest thereon, according to the conditions of one certain promissory note with interest coupons attached bearing even date with said mortgage and made by said mortgagors to said mortgagee, or order, which said mortgage was on the 17th day of November A. D. 1886, at 4 o'clock p. m., duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, in and for said County of Polk, in book "27" of mortgages on page 253, and

D. 1888, and the further sum of forty-two dollars due as interest thereon January first A. D. 1889, and the said interest is still unpaid and due, and

Whereas it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained on the part of the mortgagors to be kept and performed that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagee, or his heirs and assigns to consider and declare the whole sum secured thereby as immediately due and payable, without notice to said mortgagors or any other party, and Wannamaker and Business.

Western Rural.

You cannot tell much about a machine until you have seen it work awhile. But Mr. Wannamaker, the Post Master General, bids fair to introduce something of a novelty in the management of the post office department. Mr. Wannamaker is not much of a politician. In fact he is not a politician at all. He is a business man, first and last. From nothing he has built up an immense business and from nothing he has developed into a millionaire. He is accustomed to command a large army of employes, and as might be expected he enforces discipline in the management of his business. He has gone into the management of the post offie department with his business ideas and with no other ideas. Whether or not he will got other ideas, of course, cannot be predicted.

The first thing that struck him as being utterly out of joint was the hours which the people in his department devoted to business. He found that they came to work at 9 o'clock in the forenoon and quit at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. That was not the way he did business in Philadelphia. If that had been the way he would not now be a millionaire. Then again the clerks in his department had sold their time to the people of the United States. They had agreed to work for the public for such money, and were in honor bound to give a fair day's work. Mr. Wannamaker, therefore, made a new rule: The clerks must be at their desks at 8:30 o'clock and remain until 5 o'clock with a dinner hour, we suppose. This will lessen the expense of the department. He can dispense with the services of one clerk in four under this arrangement, and have better service than would be given if the clerks were given half their time to roam over a city with alll its temptations.

Then Mr. Wannamaker seems to have business methods in the appointments he makes. It is usually the custom to appoint any man that a Senator or Congressman recommends. A Congressman recently supposed that that rule was in force under Mr. Wannamaker. He asked for the appointment of a man to the position of post master. Where are your papers? asked the Post Master General. Oh, the man is known to me, is a good Republican and deserves the place, assured the Congressman. That will not answer, said Mr. Wannamaker, this department must know what the patrons of the office think of him.

This kind of work at Washington is refreshing, and will be still more so if it is kept up. The Post Master General has even gone so far as to refuse to remove a good post master who was an "offensive partisan." That is good, too. But it is too good to last. The doctrine of the spoils belonging to the victors is a ruling one in American politics, and the best that we can hope for, as a people, is that changes should be made upon sound business principles—that is that none but honest and competent men shall be appointed to office. It ought not to make much difference to the people at large what a man's politics are if he is a good man for the position he holds.

Defending the Holstein-Friesians.

A Reply, Founded on Facts, to a Shallow and Ill-Advised Criticism of the "Dutch Breeds."

Mr. E. A. Powell writes as follws to the Farmers' Review: In your issue of June 26, I notice on page 448 a quotation from Agriculture, of London, England, in which the writer asserts, when speaking of the Dutch (Holstein-Friesian) breed of cattle: "Taken all around the Dutch are fairly good dairy cattle, and nothing more, and in our opinion not in the reckoning, having regard to butter, veal and beef, with Shorthorns, Red Polls or Devons. * * * In quantity, rather than quality of milk, the Dutch excel any of our own, in filling the pail, but when it becomes a question of butter production, Dutch cows are nowhere if put into competition with Channel Island, Kerry or any other variety of dairy breed in this country'" etc., etc. I am at a loss to know whether this article was written twenty-five years ago, or whether the writer has been asleep during that period. Surely one or the other must have been the fact, for no intelligent writer on dairy breeds of cattle, who has been alive and kept himself well informed on the dairy topics of the day—who has kept himself informed regarding the progress made by this breed in the production of butter—would think of making such statements. A score of years or more ago, before this great breed of cattle had been tested for butter in America, articles of the style of the one in question frequently appeared in our agricultural papers, written in the interest of some other breed; but in this day of general intelligence in this country, when dairymen want facts—not mere assertions—no writer who has due regard for truth and his own reputation, will make such statements. Even the papers which are published exclusively in the interests of other breeds are inclined to treat the subject fairly, and readily concede that the Holstein-Friesian has well established its claim as a superior butter breed. For cheese, or as a general purpose breed, none in America, I believe, make even a claim to superiority. A review of the article in question will show that it is only the mere assertion of one individual, and does not contain a single fact, a single figure, a single record, to substantiate the assertion made. The writer of said article could not have been aware that Mercedes, in a 30-day trial for butter, beat Mary Ann of St. Lambert, the greatest cow of the Jersey breed. He could not have been aware that at New York city was collected the largest and most remarkable exhibition of all the dairy breeds the world has ever seen, and that the largest prize offered was for the production of butter, and that Clothilde excelled all other cows, of all breeds in the test (excepting only her own daughter) by about 26 per cent.; and the daughter, Clothilde 4th, only three years old, surpassed all other cows, excepting only her dam, by six per cent. The great butter breeds of the Channel Islands were well represented in this test. The $1,000 butter prize at the great International show at Buffalo last autumn, was won by Benola Fletcher. Jersey cows from the largest and best Jersey herds in America were entered, but just at the opening of the test were withdrawn, and the entrance fee forfeited. If the writer of the article in question had been familiar with the stock and dairy journals of America he would have known that in 1888 large prizes were offered for public tests at a great number of the leading state and national fairs in this country, and that a very large majority of such prizes were won by the Holstein-Friesian breed. As to the quality of butter made by this breed, I would refer our English cousin to the fact that at the great National Dairy Shows at New York, Chicago and Buffalo, where noted experts were selected as judges, the awards show that the quality of the butter made by the "black and white cows" is second to none. "But when it becomes a question of butter production Dutch cows are nowhere if put in competition with Channel Island, Kerry or any other variety of dairy cattle bred in this country" (England). This is a broad assertion. "Nowhere" in comparison with the dairy breeds of England. If this surprising statement be true, records and figures will demonstrate the fact, and no fair-minded, intelligent gentleman would think of making such assertions without having the figures to sustain them. We will, therefore mention a few well authenticated, well established butter records made by Dutch or Holstein-Friesian cows in this country, and will ask our friend to quote a like number of authenticated records made in England by some of the dairy breeds of that country, compared with which this breed is "nowhere." Lady Baker, 34 lbs. 6 ozs. in one week: De Kol, 33 lbs. 6 ozs. in one week; Gerben 4th, 32 lbs. in one week; Jewel, 31 lbs. 3½ ozs. in one week; Clothilde, 28 lbs. 2¼ ozs. in one week; Netherland Princess 4th, at 28 months, 21 lbs. 10¾ ozs. in one week; Tritomia, 25 lbs. 8 4-5 ozs. in one week; Imkje's Mercedes, at three years, 25 lbs 13½ ozs. in one week; Netherland Peeress, 25 lbs 8-4 ozs. in one week; Florence Herbert, 27 lbs. 13¼ ozs. in one week; Shadeland Boon, 126 lbs. in 31 days; Albino 2d, at three years, 106 lbs. 14 ozs. in 30 days; Aaggie 2d, 105 lbs. 10½ ozs. in 30 days; Aaggie 2d, 304 lbs 5½ ozs. in 90 days; Clothilde 2d, 104 lbs. 3½ ozs. in 30 days; Lady Griswold, 101 lbs. 10 ozs. in 30 days; Aegis, 100 lbs. 6 ozs. in 30 days; In the Walworth herd of 26 cows and heifers, of all ages, in milk, 22 averaged over 17 lbs., and seven of the number averaged 21 lbs. 4 11-14 ozs. of butter in a week. In the herd of the Home Farm Fine Stock Company, five cows averaged 22 lbs. 7 ozs. in a week. In the Lakeside herd 100 cows have averaged 18 lbs. 61-100 oz. in a week, 74 cows averaged 20 lbs. 8-37 oz. in a week, and 17 cows averaged 24 lbs. in a week. These are a few of the well authenticated butter records which can be given to prove the rich butter qualities of the Dutch breed of cattle. I trust our friend will quote a similar list of butter records made in his country by the Kerry or any other variety of dairy cattle, "bred in this country" (England), in comparison with which, for "butter production" the Dutch cows are "nowhere." If your English contemporary is correct in his statement, he can easily substantiate his position by quoting actual figures and records. This is a subject of vast importance to dairymen the world over.

High Rates of Interest.

Western Rural.

The Farmers' Protective Association of Story Co., Iowa, are agitating the question of lower rates of interest on farm loans. Unquestionably the high rates of interest upon money that is loaned to farmers is a great wrong and crying evil. The rate of interest has been coming down upon other classes of loans for the last fifteen years, until money loaners think themselves in rare luck if they can get six per cent. interest, and municipal loans are made at as low a rate even as two and one-half per cent. But the farmer is compelled to pay the old farm rates, and the Shylocks are pretending that they do not care to loan their money even at these rates. What are the reasons for this state of affairs? Why has not the farmer with his excellent security shared in the general reduction of interest rates. The first reason is that the farmer is generally regarded as the goose for everybody else to pluck. The money sharks find that they can impose upon him, as other sharks do, and they do it. In many cases the farmer must have money, and if nobody will loan him at less than the old extortionate rates, he must pay them. Another reason is that it is the custom to charge such rates, and custom makes the sternest kind of law. It is harder to change a custom than it is to upset a whole system of laws, so far as the disposition of the Shylocks and the effect of custom are concerned, therefore, the borrowing farmer has little to hope for.

But there is another reason for high rates, which furnishes some hope of reform. Unquestionably many money loaners do think that farm security is comparatively insecure; and there is really some cause for their so thinking. Western agents for Eastern capitalists desire to loan the money of their principals. The more money they loan the more money they receive, and while there is probably not a case where the amount loaned has exceeded the security, no doubt some of the agents have loaned well up to the point of safety; and when such instances have come to the knowledge of the principal, he has been influenced to think that farm security was not the best. Then again, the vast majority of money loaners are utterly ignorant of the character of farmers and the nature of farm security. As a matter of fact a judiciously placed farm loan is much safer than the average loan in the town or city. Let us instance a loan recently made in this city by a New York lady who loans large sums upon Chicago property. A social corporation desired to erect a club house. They purchased the ground and paid six thousand four hundred dollars for it. That exhausted their capital. To build and furnish the building they must borrow. They borrowed twelve thousand dollars from this lady for ten years at six per cent. upon first mortgage, and ten thousand dollars from other parties upon second mortgage. The building is to cost fifteen thousand. Now look at the character of this security. Here is a frame building that in ten years may be ready to crumble to the ground, and if the club should fail to make its payments the mortgagees will have a big building upon their hands, which would serve only an exceptional purpose. It might stand for years unused and unsold. It might burn down, and although, of course, it will be insured, the insurance might fail. We regard the loans upon such a property as anything but first-class, yet these professional money lenders were anxious to make the loan; and they are making such loans every day. That twenty-two thousand dollars could be placed upon farm property with fifty per cent. more safety. Loans upon farm property usually depend for safety to but a slight degree upon the buildings. A judiciously placed farm loan will be safe even if all the buildings are burned.

And now it seems to us as if the farmer might effect a great deal if he would come in direct contact with the capitalist, and teach him that farm loans are safe. While the money sifts through the hands of Western agents, there will be little hopes of lower rates. It would seem to be a work that the farmers organizations could take hold of with great profit. If they can show the capitalist that it is to his interest to loan money on farm security, at as low a rate as he loans it upon town property, the work will be accomplished. Some have advocated the loaning of the money in the United States treasury at a low rate of interest. Of course there are objections to the government doing this, as there are objections to almost everything, but The Rural has always claimed that it is just as much the duty of the government, and just as business like for it to loan money to the farmer as it is to loan it to the Pacific railroad or to National bankers. Stop the supply to such people or let the government never utter an objection, when some one, who thinks it is feasible to loan to farmers, says so.

Better Stock.

The Breeder's Guide.

It seems strange that so many will continue to breed, feed and market scrub stock with the small margin between profit and loss, when, with a better class of stock much more profitable results will be received.

In many cases all the difference in the cost between the better and the poorer stock will be the cost of service. With others it will be better to purchase necessary breeding stock. With poultry and hogs especially the breeding stock should be kept on the farm. With sheep in many cases the purchase of a blooded ram will be all that is necessary to make a decided improvement. But the average farmer will in a majority of cases find it more profitable to pay for the service for the cows and mares rather than to keep the males of these two classes. It will cost a little more to breed these to a thoroughbred male than a scrub but in paying the increase an animal will be obtained that at weaning time will sell at two or three times the amount and usually much more readily. It is always an item to get the best gain at the lowest cost. Another advantage in keeping a better class of stock is that a large gain in proportion to the amount of feed can be realized. To this may be added the readier sale and the better price it is possible to realize. With nearly all classes of farm products the better grades sell for the higher price and are in demand when it is difficult if not impossible to dispose of lower grades at any price. In many cases the increase in price is in reality that much better profit. So that the sending of the better class of products to market implies a better profit of the amount of the increased price it is possible to obtain.

Why a farmer is willing to breed a class of stock to feed out the products of the farm that he has by toiling early and late succeeded in raising, feeding and fattening for market certain that the highest prices will not be realized or the best profit returned when with a little increase in the first cost more profit is easily possible is difficult to determine, and yet this is done year after year by still a large class.

Waste of Time.

The Western Rural.

Time is money, says the old adage. Millions of people do not seem to think so, or else are exceedingly profligate in the use of money. The waste of the precious moments is beyond computation, and we do not mean to touch upon the generally recognized methods of wasting time which the idler and drunkard, for instance, make use of. We desire particularly to call attention to the waste of time, of which so many of us are guilty in ordinary business affairs. We lack strict methods in many things that we do every day. The man who builds an inconvenient house or barn makes the waste of time a necessity. Every unnecessary step we take is a waste of time. Perhaps the average man wastes a quarter of his life by practicing poor methods or no methods at all. Frequently old customs are greatly to blame for this profligacy. We too often insist in keeping in old ruts although it requires much longer to arrive at a certain point by the old rut than if we got out and cut across lots. It is said that leaving out the letter u in words like honour is equivalent in saving to the world the productive capacity of five hundred men every year. That is it took all the time of five hundred men every year to make that letter in such words as the one named. The old system of teaching in our schools was another illustration of the waste of time through imperfect methods and old customs. It required weeks and months for a child to learn the alphabet. It required other weeks and months for it to learn the multiplication table. How many a child is taught to read, who could not repeat the alphabet to save its life, and is quite proficient in arithmetic without being able to repeat the multiplication table. A child is taught to read in a short time. His text book is not a book at all. Perhaps a grasshopper is put into the hand of the little six-year-old and he handles and studies that grasshopper for days and weeks, and from it he learns to read, learns the use of figures and a good deal of natural history. Without going into the details of the system, the child learns more from that system of teaching in a few days than he would learn in weeks from the old system. It is a great saving of time.

Time is an important element in all that we undertake. It is an important element in reform work, and to save time in such work, we need to be practical in all that we advocate. Impractical theories will not be accepted by the masses. To advocate them is time thrown away. We should aim to make every word and every act tell.

A Wild Goose Chase.

A. C. Wilkinson, T. G. Thompson Ole Erickson, Hans Peterson, Jailor Tuelon and druggist Anderson, having heard of the fame of the North Dakota goose, and the numerosity thereof, left on Tuesday's train bound for a wild goose chase near Lakota.

U. S. Senator, Walter Muir.

The State of North Dakota did nobly at its first election, electing the entire Republican ticket, and a farmer for governor, and they will go on with the good work in the election of U. S. Senators so far as party is concerned but will they elect a farmer for one of the members? With a good farmer as a candidate and with at least two-thirds of the votes of North Dakota, farmers, this would seem a perfectly proper and sensible thing to do, but will they do it? Walter Muir, a farmer residing at Hunter, Cass County, N. D., is said to be a candidate for the position of United States Senator. Mr. Muir is an old-time resident of Minnesota and has served his constituents well and faithfully in the State Legislature where he was honored by being placed upon important committees. He is an old soldier, a life long Republican and a farmer, and his legislative experience has demonstrated his fitness for the position. He was a co-worker with our own Congressman Comstock in the Legislature, and that fact would not be a detriment to him should the farmers of North Dakota see fit to secure his election to a seat in the United States Senate. North Dakota has so far put her best foot forward in her selection of her officials and we hope she will make no mistake in this important matter. Give the farmers a show in the Senate as well as elsewhere.

Heron Lake News: The St. Paul News seems greatly concerned as to who the Republicans will nominate next year for governor. Its editor has been steeping for the past 35 years in strong Democratic lye and just why he should exercise himself about the Republicans now is a mystery; especially as he "sees Democratic victory ahead."

The Mankato Register is becoming tired of so much boodle talk and says: "Will some of the papers that are writing weekly effusions about boodle in gubernatorial campaigns be so kind kind as to put in words the exact meaning of the term? Do they know what "boodle" is? All men of all parties will admit that there is much legitimate expense attached to a political campaign, requires more than a mere pittance, whether the candidate be rich or poor, and if he does not have it he has to raise it through others. Now, if any paper can draw the line, it will have defied "boodle," which of these journals will set definite boundaries about the word that it may be considered intelligently?"

Holstein-Friesian Stock.

Having more stock than I can care for during the winter I will for the next twenty days dispose of the surplus until sold on terms to suit purchasers. Will sell for cash or on long time or will lease for a term of years to responsible parties, who understand a good cow and what she needs. This is the chance of a lifetime for parties desirous of obtaining a choice dairy herd who think they are not able to buy. Call early for choice. H. E. COOKE, JOURNAL Office.

The Truth about American Farm Mortgages.

Under the above caption the London Economist, the highest financial authority in the world, publishes prominently a communication from an English correspondent, Mr. S. Nugent Townshend, of No. 150 Leadenhall street, London, which contains some important statements in refutation of many of the sensational stories concerning western farm mortgages which are to be found in the columns of the free trade papers of this country.

Mr. Townshend begins his communication with the remark that for six years he was the special correspondent of the Field on Agriculture in the United States, for several years subsequently in charge of the foreign settlements of one of the largest railway land grants in the United States, and that he is at present manager of one of the largest American mortgage companies, and is about to be entrusted with the management of a large English company, which will do a mortgage business in the United States.

The purpose of Mr. Townshend's letter is primarily to disprove charges that had been made against the management of American farm mortgage companies, a subject with which we have no concern. After doing this he says:

"I now come to the statement of your correspondent where he says that the rate of interest runs from 8 to 14 per cent. Such a statement recalls to me nothing but the return of Rip Van Winkle. Fourteen years ago such rates were not uncommon in Oregon and Washington Territory, and other far western places, but I should be indeed glad to know where any more than half of 14 per cent. can be now safely got on first mortgage on any farm in the Middle States. I know, as a matter of fact, that 7 per cent. is considered an extremely good rate in Kansas. Unsound or struggling companies invest their money at 8 to 14 per cent. upon house property, upon second mortgage, or by advancing within a fraction of the full value of a farm, but when I speak of 7 per cent. as a fair rate I refer to companies that only lend a third of the appraise value of lands in cultivation, which standard is followed by all the leading mortgage companies in New York and New England.

It is, unfortunately, true that large numbers of foreclosures have been made in Kansas this year, but why? Because three or four years ago, after a succession of splendid harvests, and also in consequence of an enormous tide of emigration, Kansas lands 'boomed' to an unprecedented extent, and just then a number of new mortgage companies entered the field and lent, roughly, about 50 per cent. upon the value of land, which now, in consequence of three bad harvests and a slackening tide of emigration, has probably lost fully 50 per cent. of its value. Many farmers had consequently nothing left to work with or for, and threw up their farms, but although some of the companies escaped with very narrow margins, I am not aware that any of them made any loss.

I can not agree with your correspondent that the western farmer has of late been borrowing to tide himself over crop failures and unprofitable seasons, for the simple reason that mortgage companies will not lend money for any such purpose. The western farmer puts every penny he has into land as a rule, and then he borrows to stock it and to erect buildings and shedding and fences. That being done, supposing a bad season does come, he has borrowed all that the mortgage company will lend him, and no mortgage company will lend him any more. Any one that knows anything of the Western States must admit that this is an unanswerable argument.

Agriculture in America may be undergoing a gradual and permanent depression, but we have heard a great deal of this for the last ten years, and I ask your correspondent to point out a single farm in any one of the Western States that has not more than doubled its value in the last ten years. I have known a certain company, through a blundering or fraudulent manager in America, to lend six times the real value of land in Oregon, and I have lived to see that enormous debt repaid, simply owing to the natural rise in the value of land there."

These statements from an unprejudiced source, and from one who is entirely familiar with his subject, show (1) that the rate of interest on western farm mortgages has been greatly exaggerated; (2) that loans made on western farms have been wholly to supply the lack of capital by western farmers; (3) that where losses to western farmers have occurred they have been due to bad harvests more than to the exactions of money-lenders; and (4) that there has been a general and marked appreciation in the value of western farms. The whole testimony of this intelligent and unprejudiced English writer squarely contradicts the charges of our free traders that western farmers have been "robbed" by eastern mortgage companies. Few of these farmers could have carried on their farming operations on any but the most primitive scale but for the money they have borrowed, and this borrowed money has therefore been a blessing to them.

M. W. Jenson was in from McIntosh this week. Says he will have the new mill running in good shape this week. The machinery will be of the latest improved styles and capable of turning out the best of flour. Success to the new mill. That's what its enterprising proprietors deserve.

Early on Saturday morning as a stock train was leaving the yard the engine left the track and went down the embankment just missing a little cottage. The fireman and engineer jumped as she went over and escaped injury. The morning train was delayed two hours by the accident. The engine was got back on the track during the day not as badly mashed as one would have supposed she would be.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., OCTOBER 10, 1889.

Holsteins in Southwestern Kansas.

Holstein-Friesian Register.

Two years ago last spring I sent a few head of Holstein-Friesian cattle to the Medicine Valley Stock Farm at Medicine Lodge, Barber County, Kansas. I have since added to the number by purchase and by breeding several very choice animals of that breed, until now we have quite a respectable herd for that locality. We have at the head of our herd Kansas Netherland, a grandson of the great Netherland Prince, and Pietertje Prince, a grandson of the great cow Pitertje 3d, and great grandson of Pitertje 2d. We have several choice young bulls and heifers, descendants of Kansas Netherland, Pitertje Netherland, De Brave Hendrick, Violet King and other noted Holstein families. Our stock is thoroughly acclimated to the climate, and they are doing nicely. This season has been an uncommonly favorable one for crops all through the Western states. The crops in Kansas are the greatest she ever raised. Wheat, oats, corn, millet, sorghum and other crops are all very heavy. We have threshed a portion of our wheat and it yields at the rate of 30 bushels to the acre. When you consider the small amount of labor that was used in putting in this wheat I think this yield is remarkable. The man in charge of my farm bought 50 bushels of wheat, and in about seven days he and one team had the wheat all put in on 60 acres. He sowed only about three pecks to the acre and drilled it in on corn stubble without plowing or harrowing. There are several fields of wheat in the town of Medicine Lodge, Kansas, that are yielding at the rate of 40 to 56 bushels to the acre; another ten acres that yielded 46 bushels to the acre. The average crop in that county will be 25 bushels to the acre. I never saw heavier corn grow than we have there this year; some of ours we think will yield 8C or 90 bushels to the acre, and we place the whole crop at 60. Oats were so heavy that they lodged down badly before they were harvested, and we had so much wet weather during harvest that this crop was badly damaged. The wheat crop was all secured in good order. Free water power kept in repair for five years is offered any man who will erect a flour mill in Medicine Lodge.

The raising of sorghum is becoming a very prominent industry in that locality. There is a large new sugar mill being constructed in Medicine Lodge only a mile and a half from my farm, and over 2,000 acres of sorgham have been sown for the purpose of using it in the sugar factory. The success met with at Fort Scott last year in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum has encouraged the construction of several new factories in the State of Kansas this year. The sorghum raised in southwestern Kansas proves to be the richest in sugar of any raised in the state. The mill they have constructed at Medicine Lodge has a capacity of 250 tons of cane a day, and they expect to keep it running from about the 10th or 15th of September up to the 1st of December, and they expect to get about 100 lbs. of sugar from a ton of cane. If this factory works as successfully as the one at Fort Scott did last year, they will be able to make a good quality of sugar there this fall at a cost of not more than two cents per pound, and the farmers of Barber County at least will be very likely to buy their sugar of somebody else than the present Sugar Trust.

A creamery was started at Medicine Lodge on the 1st of May, but I am sorry to say it has not met thus far with very good success. The high price they paid for the construction of the factory ($7,500), together with the great falling off in the price of butter and cheese, has made the enterprise rather unsuccessful thus far, but it is still running and we expect that during the fall and winter, when the price of butter is advanced, that we shall make up for the losses thus far met with. Barber County, Kansas, is an excellent location for a fall, spring and winter creamery. They get a large amout of pasture from the wheat and rye fields that are sown in the fall. If they sow wheat or rye about the 10th or 20th of September, in three weeks after it is sowed it makes the finest kind of pasture for milch cows and calves, and the wheat and rye are not injured by pasturing if the ground keeps moist and not too wet. The wheat would grow a foot or eighteen inches high in the fall if it was not cropped down by the cattle if it was sowed early. I believe that we have one of the best locations there for breeding the Holstein stock there is in the United States. There is a large section of country to the southwest and west of us that is fast settling up. We are within 20 miles of Indian Territory, which it is expected will be open for settlement this fall, and we are not far from Oklahoma. We expect there will be a large demand for Holstein stock, not only in this region, but in the states of Texas and Colorado. I am glad to see that the interest in the Holstein stock is being kept up.

The Explanation of our Great Prosperity Made by an English Paper.

The London Morning Post.

According to our friends of the Cobden school American commerce and American manufactures ought to be declining rapidly under the "withering influence" of a protective tariff. Instead of this the statistics to which we refer show that in twenty years the population of the states has increased by 69 per cent., the hay crop has increased 106 per cent., the cotton crop 194 per cent., and the production of pig iron over 386 per cent. Emigration last year was on an exceptionally large scale. One day the number landed at Castle Garden depot exceeded 11,000, the highest figure ever recorded in the annals of the New York Immigration Bureau. In fact, the stream of new arrivals poured in so densely as to tax to the utmost the resources both of the numerous Atlantic steamship lines and the immigration authorities of the eastern ports. Many of the lines were obliged to order their agents to cease booking "steerage" for a time. A feature, too, of last year's immigration was the unusual number of mechanics, bricklayers, plasterers, and masons from Scotland, Wales, and the north of England who went out to the states in response to advices from the other side stating that there were good openings there for such handicraftsmen. And yet there are scores of politicians here so blind as to what is going on in the world as to stick to the old fetich formula that protection is more injurious to the country that adopts it than to the country against which the hostile tariffs are aimed.

But for the serious consequences entailed upon our British working classes, who feel every day more and more the pinch of foreign competition, it would be decidedly amusing to note how completely every one of the principles assumed by the one-sided free trade school of this country is negatived by facts and falsified by the experience of commonplace business men. We are constantly told that protection raises the cost of commodities; that a hostile tariff—as Mr. John Bright said but a few days back in a published letter—is only a tax which the community pays to support the particular industry benefited by it.

Now, as a matter of fact, what do we find in America? Why, their manufacturers can actually beat us out of the field on the score of mere cheapness only. So far from protection enhancing the cost of their goods, they can turn them out at rates with which we, with all our free trade, can not manage to compete. The Yale lockmakers can afford to pay the carriage of their goods to England and yet undersell the Wolverhampton masters in the very heart of the lock trade, just as the Belgians can quote lower rates for angle iron delivered in Derby than the local ironmasters of the Midlands. The Philadelphia enginemakers can turn out as serviceable a locomotive as an English firm, and ship it all the way to New Zealand for £600 less than the English traders. In South Russia the agricultural implement trade is said to be passing entirely into the hands of American exporters in spite of English and German competitors, though the latter are nearer by 3,000 miles of the local market. With the exception of made-up clothing, which is dear because labor is highly paid, and not because the duty on stuffs is so heavy, there is not a single manufactured article produced in the United States, from carpets to cotton, from locomotive engines to steel axes, from agricultural implements to cutlery and Yankee notions, as many little domestic appliances are called, which is not as cheap or even cheaper there than in this country.

Another of the specious truths of the free trader underlies the assertion, so frequently made, that where industries are protected the quality of the products is inferior, owing to the indifference of the native manufacturers, who fear nothing from the rivalry of better makers abroad; and that people have therefore to pay a higher price for a worse article. A glance at America will show how utterly unfounded this assumption is. The very ground upon which Americans beat our own and European manufacturers in many neutral markets is that their articles are quite as good as those of their rivals.

A striking instance of the progress in quality made under the protective tariff is furnished by the American silk industry. Within five years of the adoption of protection in the United States the government inspectors were enabled to report a marked improvement in the quality and patterns of the native-made silks; and within ten years the Washington authorities found themselves in a position to assert that, excepting in the very finest grades of goods, the products of the American looms were fully up to those of France. The assertion, indeed, of our radical theorists that protection would lead to an inferiority of manufacture is based upon the absurd assumption that there is no such thing as local competition. It is, in fact, assumed that if the foreigner is excluded the native manufacturers will just combine to keep up prices and knock down quality. These theorists forget that the only manner in which one native firm can push its way as against another is by lowering prices and raising quality, precisely in the way that it has been done in America. But for this the idea of competing with English and other European manufacturers in neutral markets would be an impossibility.

The sense of humor must be remarkably deficient in some of our free trade economists, or they would see in the figures we have above quoted a singular commentary on some of the dearest assumptions of Mr. Cobden and his followers. Facts, however, do not appear to count with many of these doctrinaires, or the remarkable manner in which the industrial progress of the United States controverts their economic views would lead them to gravely question the advantages to be derived from the one-sided fiscal policy to which this country stands committed.

MORTGAGE SALE.

FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitobu Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

AMES IS THROWN OVER,

Ramsey County Anti-Doran Irish Democrats have no use for Dr. Alonzo A. Ames.

His Offense in Attacking the Irish was too Deep for Their Forgiveness.

They Determine upon Bestowing the Gubernatorial Mantal upon J. J. Hill.

St. Paul Dispatch.

When the late lamented (that is politically speaking) Dr. Alonzo A. Ames made his now celebrated attack on the Irish home rule question, a large section of the Celtic residents of the Twin Cities found themselves in a quandary. They were democrats and they were anti-Kelly and Doran, but they were also Irish. Dr. Ames' attack deprived them of their champion, and they were, figuratively, between the devil and deep sea. On the one hand all that was left to them as Irish democrats was the Kelly and Doran faction, against which they waged such bitter but unsuccessful warfare last fall, while failing their embracing the O K party, they were left rudderless and dismasted, without a leader.

In Hennepin County the Ames faction has seemed inclined to condone the offense cause, and a few instances have been recorded where even Irishmen have partially forgiven him, but in Ramsey County it is different. From the moment Dr. Ames confirmed the interview first published by the Tribune-Star his fate was sealed so far as their support was concerned. He has to all intents and purposes ceased to be a factor in their political considerations. But in spite of this they have not been able to reconcile themselves to Mike Doran's leadership. "Reformed democracy," with its Judge Flandrau and John W. Willis, was more than their proud stomachs could swallow, or probably ever will. They have been quietly looking for another leader in place of Dr. Ames, and have now, they think, hit upon the very man for them. It would be hard to guess the individual upon whom these "unreformed" democrats had placed Alonzo's mantle, but the announcement will no doubt call a blush of honest pride to the cheek of the favored one. President Dick Gorman, of the board of public works first announced the selection, and, indeed, is said to have originated it. Yesterday he told a Dispatch reporter that the choice of the anti-Kelly and Doran democrats was no less a personage than J. J. Hill, the president of the Manitoba railway. Seeing the incredulaus smile upon the repotter's face, Mr. Gorman said:

"You may smile, but it is a fact, nevertheless. And why should not Mr. Hill make a good candidate? His interests—and you will admit they are large ones—are all centered in this state, and what benefits Minnesota benefits Jim Hill. This is especially true as regards agricultural matters. Another point is that in the matter of wealth and business connections Mr. Hill is the only democrat I can name who can be placed on the same footing as Gov. W. R. Merriam."

"Do you suppose Mr. Hill could be induced to accept a nomination at the hands of your party?" asked the reporter.

"I have no doubt that if proper representations were made to him he would accept. You may smile, but I tell you J. J. Hill is our man."

In this section Mr. Gorman is not alone by any means, but it will require more than a local boom before Mr. Hill's name can come before a democratic convention. It will require Mr. Hill's consent. This is the only thing in the way of the ex-Ames democrats securing a first-class candidate in the place of the too-frank doctor.

Mean Men.

The Western Rural.

Perhaps you have been called a mean man many times in your life. It is possible that it may have made the heart ache sometimes. If a man is mean his heart ought to ache, but a well developed mean man seldom has a heart of the aching kind. Why do they call you mean? Perhaps you do not drive to the village grog shop, and treat all the loafers of the town. You can afford to be called mean for that. If you did it your own wife and children, suffering, perhaps, for the necessaries of life, might call you mean. You could not afford to have them do that. Perhaps you are close in making a bargain, want every cent that is coming to you, and expect people to do just as they agree. That is all right. If you pay every cent you owe and do just as you agree, you can afford to be called mean, and we will venture to say that those who know you most intimately will say of you, he is close, but he is a good husband and father and friend and a very nice man. When a man must buy out a grog shop or give all his money away to lazy loafers in order to get the name of being a good fellow, he had better conclude that it is best for him, best for his family and best for society to be considered a mean man all the days of his life.

MILK AND BUTTER TESTS

OF HOLSTEIN-FRIESIANS

AT THE STATE FAIR.

Twenty-two cows entered for the milk and butter tests at the state fair. Fourteen were in the individual cow tests, and four herds of five cows each contested for the special herd prizes. The individual cow tests were determined by chemical analysis, while in the herd tests the centrifugal cream separator and the churn were used. The Holstein-Friesian cow, Pet Texelaar 2d, property of N. J. Leavitt, of Waseca, Minn., took premiums amounting to $285, and the two gold medals offered by the Holstein-Friesion Association of America for the Holstein cow giving the most milk and producing the most butter. Almee, a Holstein-Friesian, the property of I. C. Wade, of Jamestown, Dak., took second for most milk. I. C. Wade's herd of Holsteins took the first prize for a herd of fine cows producing the most milk and the most butter. S. Leslie secured second prize in these classes. A grade Holstein cow belonging to Leslie made the most butter of any cow in the tests—2.86 pounds in 24 hours. We present herewith the official report. We ask our readers who are interested in dairy matters to study the table carefully; it will be found to contain food for thought and guides to future action. The great difference in the individuality of cows of the same breed is graphically illustrated; what may be done in the way of "grading up"—a field open to the cultivation of every farmer in the land—is shown in the performance of the wonderful grades belonging to Sam Leslie.

STORY ABOUT MANVEL.

How he Came to Abandon the Manitoba Road for the Santa Fe.

An interesting story is told, says The Chicago Herald, in connection with the retirement of Allen Manvel from the position of general manager of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, and becoming president of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe.

To begin with, Mr. Manvel is one of the oldest, most practical and conservative railroad men in the country, and he has always been credited with looking with disfavor on plans of President Hill for a vast system of extensions which would give the Manitoba a terminus on the Pacific coast. The extensions have been made, however, and the Manitoba has on its hands a line into Montana which it will take years to place on a dividend-paying basis. Over one-fourth of the Manitoba's twenty millions of stock is held in Boston—much of it by people also interested in the Santa Fe. The Boston interest was opposed to a policy of extensions and sustained Mr. Manvel. Finally the stockholders became divided. One faction determined to oust Mr. Hill from Manitoba presidency and put Mr. Manvel in his place. The other faction sustained Mr. Hill, who is personally the largest holder of Manitoba stock. Some time ago it became apparent that Mr. Hill could not be beaten and Mr. Manvel and his friends saw that his enforced retirement from the Manitoba was certain. Accordingly, Mr. Manvel quietly commenced making his arrangements to leave peaceably.

The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe needed reorganization, and the Boston interest knew Mr. Manvel, and remembering how he stood by them in their efforts to secure a conservative policy on the Manitoba, they used their influence to place him at the head of the Santa Fe, with such success that he was enabled to resign from the Manitoba long before the meeting at which it was hoped to place him at the head of that system.

Debtor and Creditor.

Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

Some queer ideas with regard to personal rights have grown out of the credit system of this age. The presumption in any interchange of property, whether of labor between farmers, of boots for clothing, clothing for groceries, or either for cash, is that each of the parties of the exchange is bettered by such exchange, and that the obligation is mutual. In every honest and equal bargain such is the case, and when each side furnishes the equivalent bartered for the goods of the other, the obligation is so regarded.

But it happens that when credit enters into the transaction, one party to the trade furnishing an article of value and the other simply agreeing to give in return an article of value at some future time, this feeling of mutual obligation is not always entertained. The party receiving the article of value by means of credit extended to him, often holds the opinion that he alone confers the obligation, and that if his creditor ever gets anything but promises to pay, he, (the debtor) ought to be considered as having conferred a very great favor. If he gets credit without the limit of time being specified, a dun is often regarded as an impertinence, for which resentment of one sort or another is a proper exhibition. If the person to whom credit is given is at all loose in his principles on this score, or regardless of his good name, his resentment usually takes the form of purposely delaying the payment of the debt or repudiating it altogether. The world is honeycombed through and through with this species of financial rottenness until it has come to pass in many cases that if a debt is uncomplainingly paid when payment is asked for, the creditor feels almost like returning a part of it out of pure gratitude for having "got his hat back."

But just think of it. If the bargain was honest, and there is any obligation at all that is not mutual, it is conferred to the creditor; and in any event when he has given value and at some subsequent time asks for value in return, he merely asks for his own. His claim for it is as righteous as though it was a book which he had lent and wanted back, and to refuse payment when possible to be made, or to be angry that it should be asked for, is really as monstrous behavior as would characterize him who should so conduct himself on being asked to bring home a loaned volume of some standard work.

Voting Cattle.

The Western Rural.

We saw something of an election recently held in a part of Cuicago. Money was as free as rum and that was absolutely free. The voter had only to name his price and he got it. Scores and scores were bought, marched up to the polls and voted. These were poor men—men who believe that the present conditions of American society are against them, and who in their daily toil and in their humble homes complain bitterly of the wrongs they suffer. But whatever wrongs a man may suffer, however fully he may be plundered, there is one thing he can possess in this country and that is the independence of manhood at the ballot box. The ballot box is a weapon that the humblest citizen may use for his own protection and no one can prevent him using it. But when he is robbed of the fruits of his labor three hundred and sixty-four days in the year, and on the three hundred and sixty-fifth offers his birthright for a mess of pottage he has nothing left which is worth living for. It seems never to have occurred to such men that when a candidate for office goes forth to buy votes, he naturally expects to get the money expended back again in some way. Whatever the way adopted to do that may be, the effect, directly or indirectly, comes upon every citizen, rich or poor, high or low. It is a solemn truth, of which it would seem unnecessary to speak, that men must be true to themselves before they can expect that others will be true to them. The citizen who will sell his vote does not occupy as high a position in the esteem of the man who buys it as the bull pup that sleeps on the rug in the buyer's house. Oceans of blood and mints of money have been expended to enable the humblest citizen of the Republic to be a man, a self-respecting, independent man on election day, and if the citizen has not manhood enough to be such, he is a disgrace to his race and a blotch upon the Republic.

Sensible View of It.

The Balaton Journal.

A late number of the Verndale Journal offers some very timely and wise remarks in regard to the support of local papers. We wish, it says, that the people of this, and every other town and county in our state knew that the success of a newspaper meant much more than the prosperity of the man who owns it and edits it. It certainly ought to bring him prosperity, but it does something much greater even despite its failure to do this. But we fear that some persons withhold their support merely because the publisher will reap a benefit and lose sight of the larger results which the community, and each individual, would receive from the good newspaper strengthened and made successful thereby. A newspaper's success and its helpfulness are not the result of the publisher's and editor's efforts alone, although its thrift and excellency may be; but the people have a part in this work, and if they share the glory, are they not only partners in its failure and decay?—The farmer, the laborer, the mechanic, the merchant, the professional man, can contribute largely to the success of the newspaper, by offering to the encouragement and support it cannot get along without, and the result is beneficial to them and to the community, for a newspaper is not an individual possession, but an institution to honor or dishonor as the people elect. This is plainly seen in the career of a newspaper as it passes through successive ownerships. The good will and the business of many adheres throughout those changing scenes because it is regarded as an established institution, one which will not pass away. Therefore the more encouragement a newspaper receives the sooner will it become established and the more helpful may it be to the community and the greater excellency may it attain.

BACK FROM INDIAN LANDS.

Hon. H. M. Rice Tells of the Treaty Work Now in Progress.

Minneapolis Journal.

Hon. H. M. Rice, chairman of the Chippewa Indian commission, when interviewed in St. Paul, said that the Red Lake Indians had ceded all of their country except a small reservation to be given in allotment. About 3,000,000 acres have been ceded. The cession includes valuable pine forests worth, it is estimated, $60,000,000. The commission did not see a drunken Indian on their trip. It is believed that one result of the present treaty will be to forever break up the tribal relations and much enhance the condition of the Indians. The lands ceded are to be appraised and sold. Negotiations have been concluded with the Red Lake, the White Earth, the Pembina occupying part of the White Earth reservation, the Otter Tail Pillagers, the Gull Lake, Leech Lake, Cass Lake, Lake Winnipegoosis and White Point tribes, those not living on any reservation in the vicinity of Sandy Lake, and the Mille Lacs. In a few days the commission will leave for Grand Portage, going from there to Vermillion Lake and then to Fond du Lac.

Here You Are.

Auction sale of choice Holstein-Friesian cows and bulls at the old stables of M. R. Brown, on Saturday next, at 1 o'clock p. m.

Do You Want

To trade young colts or sheep for good work horses? If so call on or address S. M. McKee, Crookston. [24-tf]

Don't forget the great stock sale that occurs on Saturday when a large lot of choice cows and heifers of the best milk and butter strains will be offered for sale under the hammer. You will never have a better chance to secure some good stock that, with proper care and attention will pay a big interest on the investment. Tell your friends and neighbors and come and see what you can do.

On Monday night as Albert Simpson, Ole Thompson and Bill Weaver were driving out of town the team took fright and started to run away. Everything was all right enough until the whiffletrees and neck-yoke broke and then there was a sudden parting of friends in that wagon. Ole escaped with a few bruises but Simpson and Weaver had to be placed in the dry docks by friends. Bill has not showed up yet. Albert was limping around on Tuesday.

They Must Go.

Those choice dairy cows to be sold at the old stables of M. R. Brown on Saturday next. Go and see them.

F. M. Reed, of St. Paul, one of the best boys in existence, dropped into THE JOURNAL sanctum on Wednesday. Frank is one of the wheelhorses of the young men's campaign of last fall and is now general manager of the Northwestern Bureau of Information, of St. Paul; the object of which bureau is to furnish to the people of the Northwest, all kinds of information they may desire from St. Paul or Minneapolis. Business men will find it of great value.

HACK & GALLASCH.

Fisher Bulletin: Thompson & Johnson, proprietors of the Red River Valley Roller Mills at this place, shipped several cars of flour to Europe direct this week, and among them we noticed one car for Antwerp, Holland, and one for Londondary, Ireland. Mr. Thompson informs us that they are shipping a great deal to the old country just now, all of which goes to show that the flour made at Fisher from the famous No. 1 "Red" is becoming pretty popular the world over.

Rariton Chinchilla over coats $3.50 at the C. O. D. Clothing House.

Halvor Grundeson, of Fisher, dropped in to see about that little subscription and to chat with THE JOURNAL man on Tuesday. Mr. G. says the quantity of wheat is not nearly up to average and the quality, he thinks, is impaired by the vast amount of foul stuff in it. He thinks it would pay farmers to clean out all the weed seed and foul stuff as they not only save dockage but are liable to raise the grade of their wheat. Mr. G. is one of the progressive kind of farmers who will make a success if there is any such thing in the book.

OUR PREMIUM.

THE JOURNAL acknowledges the receipt of several past due subscriptions and many new ones during the past two or three weeks, and wishes, while acknowledging these favors, to call attention to its premium whereby every subscriber receives a substantial benefit. We consider that THE JOURNAL is worth its price to every one, but as an inducement for payment in advance and payment this fall of the old account we have concluded to give every one of our patrons a liberal present. We therefore have made arrangements with Farm, Stock and Home by which we can give that excellent paper for one year to every paid up subscriber. We need all of the money now due on back subscriptions, and would esteem it an especial favor if those on whom we have waited for several years would call and see us. If it is impossible to settle this fall, call and see us anyhow.

Don't Miss It

Hack & Gallasch closing out sale will benefit all cash buyers as they are selling out to get out of business and mean what they say.

A Bargain for All.

At the stock sale on Saturday next. If you want a good heavy dairy cow or a choice bull don't miss the sale at the old stables of M. R. Brown. Sale to commence at 1 o'clock, p. m.

Grand Gift Concert.

That Crookston has one of the finest cornet bands in the Northwest goes without saying, and it is well known that the leader of the Crookston Cornet Band is without a peer. The people of Crookston all rejoice in that fact and feel proud of it, but we wonder how many of them ever stopped to count the cost of organizing, equipping and maintaining such an enterprise? It requires a great deal of time to become proficient in music, a considerable expense for instruments, and if this expense had to be met by our citizens we imagine the sum total would be much larger than some of us think. The band is composed of volunteer members who cheerfully give time to the necessary practice and for free open air concerts, time, which computed at its value in their various avocations would amount to a nice sum annually. Is there one among us who supposes that the money the band earns each year would be an equivalent for the cost to each member! Well, it would not, nor begin to be. It is a duty the city owes itself to support its band and to support it well. In order to provide for its running expenses the first cornet band has decided to give a vocal and instrumental musical entertainment early in December, and the plan is to offer a prize, a fine $100 parlor organ, the holder of a ticket being entitled to a chance. Thus whoever buys a ticket will have a chance to secure a fine organ, will enjoy a grand musical treat and will have the consciousness of having contributed to the support of a deserving institution. All of these inducements should surely be sufficient to fill the Opera House to overflowing. It is no more than the band deserves, and it is a duty our citizens owe to themselves. Let us all turn out and give the Crookston Cornet band a grand rally.

By its effective efforts in behalf of the agricultural interest of the Northwest during the past five years, Farm, Stock and Home, of Minneapolis, Minn., has gained a position and influence equalled by no other paper. We will send it and THE POLK COUNTY JOURNAL one year for only $1.50. Sample copies may be seen at this office.

Soon to Be in Operation.

DULUTH Special to Pioneer Press, Oct. 10.—General Manager Fisher was in Duluth yesterday. He is feeling happy over the progress on his road, and the good prospect of the final success of the scheme he has cherished for years. He says that trains will be running over the road to the Mississippi river by Nov. 15th. The Griffin Mining company near the line of the road will begin shipping ore next season.

In Favor of the Manitoba.

WASHINGTON, Special to Pioneer Press, Oct. 12.—Secretary Noble to-day reversed the decision of the general land office in the case of the Manitoba railway against Charles LeBlanc for a tract in the Crookston district. The land office awarded the land to LeBlanc. The secretary says the right of the company attached when LeBlanc released his land after the filing of the map of definite location by the road.

Confinement and Overwork

Have broken down hundreds of men and women and made them an easy prey to "the thousand ills that flesh is heir to." Probably nature never intended man to be shut up in an office, poring over musty law books and spreading ink on ponderous ledgers, or she would have constructed him differently. But our artificial modes of living have bound most of us in such iron chains that there is no hope of escape, and the only thing that we can do is to plan for temporary relief, best obtained by pleasant travel. In selecting a route, either to St. Louis and Denver in the south and west, Chicago on the east, or St. Paul and Minneapolis on the north, you will make no mistake in choosing "The Burlington." A smooth track, most elegant equipment, and competent and courteous employes make a ride over this line always a pleasure. Ask your local agent for tickets by this line, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen'l Pass. Agent, C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

To the Honorable City Council of the City of Crookston;

The undersigned, City Engineer of said city, respectfully reports that I have made an estimate of the cost of the sewer which, by resolution of the City Council, passed on the 12th day of September, A. D. 1887, was directed to be constructed along the center of Third, Main, Second and Broadway streets from east end of sewer under railroad tracks on Third street to center of intersection of Broadway and Fletcher streets, in the city of Crookston, and that the following is a discription of each lot or parcel of land along which such sewer will be built, and which has not become legally liable to pay its proportion of the cost of same, with my estimate of the cost of building such sewer in front of such lot or parcels respectively, which cost does not exceed the cost of ordinary sewers in front of each lot or parcel:

FARMER GIBBS.

The Railroad Commissioner in Duluth—He Talks Crops and Ignores Railroads and Politics.

Duluth Tribune.

Strolling through the lobby of the Spalding last night, a Tribune reporter discovered Farmer Gibbs, state railroad commissioner, trying to hide behind a column. He was "treed" at once and asked to talk about some topic of interest to the general public. As a premonitory symtom, it may not be out of place to remark that Farmer Gibbs has upon two or three occasions come very near being struck by gubernatorial lightning, and has had the divine instinct to secure an appointment on the board of railroad commissioners under both Governors McGill and Merriam. A gentleman who can hold his job under these untoward circumstances has something of the Napoleonic genius which indicates a really great man.

"What is the railroad situation?" asked the reporter.

"I have only come up to see how rapidly a town can grow during hard times," remarked the Farmer.

"The readers of the Tribune would be glad to hear from your excellency on some political or railroad topic, Mr. Gibbs."

"I am on a vacation, therefore excuse me. And then, you know, there have recently been some horrible examples of indiscretions of mouth in this state. My genial friend, Dr. Ames, of Minneapolis, got off a chestnutty remark about the people of Ireland a few days ago which should be an example to all men—even unto the latest generation. But I have been all over the state this fall, and you can say to the Tribune readers that I only express a technical and expert opinion when I say that for more than ten years I have never seen such uniformly good crops, and so many bright eyes among the farmers. Why, my friend, the past season means to the agricultural interests of this state more than tongue can tell. It signifies lifting of mortgage nightmares, more comforts in rural homes, better clothes for the children, better food on the table, better dresses for the wife. In short the crops of Minnesota mean ease, comfort and plenty for the farming districts—and you can realize that I rejoice, for I too am a farmer. Mr. Fletcher, of Minneapolis, and myself, I may say, represent in Minnesota the two poles of the agricultural magnet—he the negative, myself the positive. Mr. Fletcher the rich farmer, and myself the common, every-day, go as-you-please, delve in the soil—

"But," suggested the reporter, "Mr. Fletcher thinks that farmers should take more interest in politics. Have you anything to offer on the political situation?"

"Nothing, sir—nothing. While I am not looking after the railway interests of the state according to law, I am engaged in strictly bucolic pursuits. I sow, reap, thresh, feed the cattle, peel the potatoes for our frugal meal, rock the cradle, and tend entirely to home matters. About the harrowing life of a politician I know nothing. So I remain railroad commissioner and the crops yield bountifully and I am supremely happy. No, no, I do not know who will be nominated next year. It is a wicked and unrighteous man who seeks to peer behind the curtain a just God has drawn before our vision, and seek out the secrets of the future. "Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof"—so good night. I start immediately for St Paul."

A Southern Herd.

The correspondent of Colman's World thus describes one of the great herds of the South: Accepting the hospitality of W. B. Clark, whose residence is at "Holstein Heights," Goodletesville P. O., twelve miles north of Nashville, we find here both imported and native bred stock of this renowned dairy strain. Mr. Clark has had large experience with several breed of cattle, and being a practical and close observer, has settled firmly into the belief that the black and white are suited to his taste. He is nicely fixed here with rolling pastures and running water. At the head of herd is Netherland Majesty 2552, by Netherland King 1924, out of Lady Netherland 1263, for two years one of the Gold Medal Herd at the New York State Fair. The dam also of Netherland Prince. The grandsire of Netherland Majesty is this same Netherland Prince, 716, which stands at the head of Smith, Powell & Lamb's herd, winner of numberless prizes at the New York State Fairs. The milk and butter records of this Netherland family are worthy a place in the library of every dairyman in the land. I give a few of them: Lady Netherland, dam of Netherland Majesty, 21 lbs. 3 ozs. in a week; 88 lbs. 6 ozs. in 30 days in winter. Netherland Queen, by same, 20 lbs. butter in one week; 15,514 lbs. milk in one year as a four-year-old. Netherland Belle, by Schemmel, g.-grandsire of Netherland Majesty, at three years old, 16 lbs. 7 ozs. in one week, and 19,516 lbs. milk in one year as a four-year-old. Netherland Dowager, dam of Schemmel, 16 lbs of butter in one week and 17,160 lbs. of milk in one year. Netherland Aggie, dam Lady Netherland, at two-year-old, 10 lbs. 8 ozs. butter in one week, and 7,026 lbs. milk in six months and six days as a two-year-old. There are many others in this list. He has also Inez of Holstein Heights, two-year-old, giving 53 lbs. milk in one day and tested 15 lbs. 3½-ozs. of butter in seven days. This young cow is by his imported bull Bonny, 3070. He has also the bull St. Elmo, 714, the sire of Imogenia 2d, butter test 16 lbs. 6 ozs. in seven days, and Cresenz, milk record 52½ lbs. in one day with first calf. His sire was Uncle Tom, 163, the sire of Aegis 2d, with a milk record of 79 lbs. in a day and a butter record in severe weather in February and March of 96 lbs. 3½ ozs. in 30 days and 23 lbs. 7 ozs. in seven days. But while there are so many cows giving from 65 to 90 lbs. of milk in a day, it is idle to discriminate, and we can say truthfully they are all very, very good. This firm is fortunate in having a herdsman in the person of Mr. Hunt, who practices his theory of kind treatment and thoughtful care. The sale of a portion of this herd at West Side Park on the 12th ult. has only made room for those that are now young in days and that are quite numerous, and are receiving the kindest of Mr. Hunt's attention and Mr. Clark's thoughtful oversight. Should any of your many thousand readers come this way, they will receive a cordial welcome, and the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Clark will be cheerfully given them when they visit Holstein Heights.

B.

How to Succeed.

If you want to be healthy you must eat regularly as meat to-day will not serve you for to-morrow. To be prosperous in business advertise regularly. Stop eating and you starve and die. Stop advertising and your business takes consumption and dies also. Spasmodic advertising is like having a "feast or a famine"—more famine than feast as a general rule—and is never satisfactory. To take out your "ad" in dull times is killing your horse because he is a little lame. In dull times advertising is the most effective, as more notice is taken of printer's ink then than any other time.—[Ex.

FOUR NEW STATES.

SOUTH DAKOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, MONTANA, WASHINGTON.

On February 22, 1889, the President signed the bill creating South Dakota, North Dakota, Montana and Washington, states of the Union.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—The great Prairie State, to which the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has three main lines, reaching Ellendale, Aberdeen, Huron, Watertown and Sioux Falls. Go to South Dakota via the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitaba Railway, and pass through St. Paul and Minneapolis en route.

NORTH DAKOTA.—Where is grown the No. 1 Hard Scotch Fife Wheat; whose healthful climate nurtures the most vigorous a brainy civilization on earth; where single counties raise more wheat, oats and barley than entire states; the soil of whose fertile prairies is richer than the valley of the Nile; where the Turtle Mountain, Minot and Devils Lake land districts invite the home seeker to secure a free home. Magnificent daily train service to Fargo, Grand Forks, Grafton, Devils Lake, Bottineau, and all other important points.

MONTANA, THE GOLDEN.—Treasures in her mines of precious metals; wealth in her 4,000,000 head of live stock; profit in her fertile fields, producing a larger yield of crops than any other state or territory; the richest country per inhabitant on earth; where prosperity is universal; which has the best paid labor in the world; a balmy winter climate, caused by warm winds from the Pacific. The St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only railroad passing through a continuous agricultural country from St. Paul and Minneapolis to the Rocky Mountains. It runs through the great Reservation of 18,000,000 acres of land, free to settlers, in the Milk River Valley. Wood, water and coal in abundance; no irrigation required; the only line passing through Great Falls, with its 1,000,000 horse power cataracts? immense coal veins, and surrounding farming country of free land; through Helena, the capital city and commercial centre on Montana, and Butte, the richest mineral camp on earth, to San Francisco, by the Columbia River Valley, Portland and Shasta route, or Ogden, Utah, to California points. Remember this is the only line running dining cars, sleeping cars and free colonist sleepers of its own from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Great Falls, Helena and Butte. It is also the shortest line to Butte.

WASHINGTON.—The country of tall timber, indented by Puget Sound, the Mediterranean of the Pacific. Do not forget that the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway is the only line which offers a choice of three routes to the Pacific Coast. The Manitoba-Pacific route is the only line by which passengers en route for Tacoma, Portland and San Francisco can pass through Port Townsend and Seattle. Free colonist sleepers run through without change or delay. Distance to the Pacific Coast is same as by other lines, but prices of tickets are five and ten dollars less. Take the Seattle route.

MONEY SHARKS SAD.

They are Beaten at Their own Game.

By an Attorney for a Kansas Settler.

They Took Notes on Government Land,

And Find They Cannot Enforce Payment.

St. Paul Daily News.

TOPEKA, Kan., Oct., 14.—A rather startling financial disclosure has been made in Southwestern Kansas by a shrewd attorney living in that region, which promises to cost the loan companies interested in western mortgage loans millions of dollars. It was a common practice in the old pre-emption days for the pre-emptors to arrange for loans on their claims prior to final proof, to enable them to pay the government, and in many cases to furnish them with the bare necessities of life. Time has passed rapidly, and with three years of drouth, or at least crop failure, it is difficult to even raise the semi-annual payments of interest. There is a stipulation in most mortgages of this character that failure to take up the interest coupons regularly is sufficient cause for foreclosure. In this deplorable condition many a frontier claim holder finds himself destitute; a cold winter predicted; scant food and clothing, with no fuel save as he gathers it in the track of the herds; a prospect of foreclosure of mortgage and no earthly means of staying the proceedings, and when it is done he is without home, without money and far from work and places where relief can be obtained.

John C. Hillyar, an unfortunate settler in one of the newest and most drouth afflicted counties, found himself in the distressing condition described above and employed an attorney to defend him. He, like many other, had made the contract for his loan, and, indeed, had the papers all drawn before the final proof was made. According to the rulings of the several judges and the findings of the courts the transaction was illegal and the case was so decided by Judge Botkin, of the district court. The decision of the case was a revelation to the settlers of the great southwest. The attorney and his assistants have been called on and have engaged to defend over 200 settlers situated in like positions.

Some loan companies have proved themselves, through through their agents, veritable Shylocks. Instead of dating the mortgage when the final proof was made it is dated back all the way from one to six months. This prearrangement for loans was so general and the mortgage so universal that in the drouth afflicted districts where the interest cannot be raised there will be no end to the litigation. It was not only the pre-emptor who mortgaged; but in many instances a homestead was taken and commuted; that is, after six months' residence the government price of $1.25 per acre was paid and final proof was made. To do this the mortgage was almost inevitable.

LOSES THE LAND.

Decision Affecting Claims in the Crookston Land District.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, to Pioneer Press, Oct. 11.—Secretary Noble decided a Minnesota case to-day which affects several claims in the Crookston land district and involves pine lands owned by the Clearwater Land and Lumber company. The land is in section 33, town 147, range 38, in the heavy timber belt. It was taken as a pre emption by Hans Hanson. A special agent of the land office reported that there was fraudulent proof. The claimant asked for a hearing and the local office decided in his favor. The general land office reviewed the decision and held the entry for cancellation. The secretary finds that the entryman was one of a party consisting of himself, Chris Steenerson, John Steenerson, Elias Steenerson, Olaf Haugan, Erick Burk, Eunston Senum, John Nelson, T. Robolt and Tor Kluestist. The record of the department shows that these parties transferred the entries made by them to some of the Steenersons, and that the Steenersons transferred the land immediately to the Clearwater Land and Lumber company, which company included the Steenersons. The suggestion that these entries were made for the benefit of the company is confirmed by the fact that they are in the Minnesota pineries. It was shown by the evidence that the improvements were not sufficient to constitute valid proof, and the decision of the general land office holding the entry for cancellation is sustained. Nearly all the other entries will be decided on the same grounds, though some may be in favor of the claimants on account of sufficient proof, and as in one or two instances transfers were not made to the lumber company.

A BANGOR MAN'S TRIP.

A Pleasant and Enjoyable Journey Through the Golden Northwest.

Hudson Star and Times.

Mr. and Mrs. Abel Hunt returned home Saturday evening from their extended and most delightful trip through the great west. Mr. Hunt, in speaking with a friend about it to-day said that it was the trip of his life, and that no money could purchase from him his perfect enjoyment of it. From beginning to end the journey was a succession of surprises of the most pleasing nature and there was not a day which did not furnish its full share of entertainment for him. From Milwaukee, where they saw the National Grand Army encampment, they journeyed throughout the great northwest, visiting all such cities as Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Grand Rapids, Chicago and a host of others. On the journey west Mr. Hunt had the pleasure of meeting George M. Pullman, the great car magnate, and traveled a part of the day in Mr. Pullman's private car with him and having a most entertaining chat with his host. The Bangor man is wild over Duluth, the growth of which, he says, almost equals the wonderful fairy stories of the olden time. He was everywhere made to marvel at the peculiar beauty of the west, and wonder at the lavish expenditure of money in every direction and the fortunes made upon real estate. Mr. Hunt speaks in the same high terms of western hospitality as every Bangor man who goes there. Wherever he went he met old residents of Bangor and Penobscot County, and it seemed as if they could not do enough to make him enjoy his stay. In Chicago he came across Col. Harris A. Wheeler, who had previously made it warm for eastern visitors, and the colonel was extremely kind and attentive to the Bangor people. Mr. Hunt declares that if he ever finds Col. Wheeler in Bangor he will get even with him, if it is a possible thing. The genial Bangorean will be engaged for a long time in regaling his many friends with anecdotes of his trip, and unless he uses less glowing colors in his descriptions than he was doing this forenoon the Bangor Board of Trade ought to at once make arrangements with him to say no more. He will drive every Bangor young man with enterprise to the west.

Stay in Minnesota.

Red Wing Republican: A. Benham advises Goodhue County farmers not to be deluded by the circulars and newspaper articles so glowingly depicting the agricultural resources and advantages of Montana which are being distributed so lavishly throughout the country now. During his recent trip there he made a careful examination of the state and its resources and the conclusion he arrived at is that however rich the embryo state may be in mineral resources it is not the best place for farmers to locate. The reason for this is the terrible drouths with which that country is afflicted. Not alone are the grain fields and vegetables destroyed thereby but even grasses of all kinds. Hay was selling at $20 a ton and could hardly be secured at those figures and other feed in proportion. There has been no rain to speak of this season and the ground everywhere was covered with several inches of loose dust. At Helena he procured statistics of last year's yield in the whole territory from the territorial auditor. These statistics show that the total wheat yield in the territory does not equal the figures for this season in Goodhue County. The same is true of other cereals, in some cases the yields being far below. He saw many stock owners driving their stock out of the territory because there was no feed procurable.

Still for High License.

Chatfield Democrat: The Voice, which assumes to be the prohibition organ of this state, has lately attempted to create the impression that Bishop Ireland had abandoned his high license ideas and committed himself solely to constitutional prohibition. In a letter to Ex-Gov. McGill, Bishop Ireland declares himself as firmly in favor of high license as ever, and says that policy has done too much good in Minnesota to be abandoned. He supposes the Voice drew its false inference from a speech made by him before a total abstinence society in Minneapolis in which he declared that saloons ought to be blotted from the face of the earth. While he still thinks so he does not believe that public sentiment is ripe for prohibition, and is not willing to abandon the benefits of high license until something better can be obtained.

Farm, Stock and Home: It is said there never was so much binding twine carried over by dealers as there was this year, yet we cannot hear of any farmer who particularly inconvenienced himself by doing without twine; we are unable to reconcile the situation with scarcity of raw material." But we know of one sick trust, and we know what ails it.

The Minnesota State Fair.

WHY FARMERS DID NOT VISIT IT.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Why this light attendance? Why so few farmer visitors, here? Why are empty spaces for exhibits so numerous? These and other questions of like character were often asked during the late Minnesota state fair. It is not surprising that they were asked, the only wonder is that the situation should have been of a character to suggest them. Better weather for a fair was never known; it was absolutely perfect during the entire ten days. The season had been an unusually productive one, and farmers were better able to visit their state fair than for several years past. The present has proven to be a good fall for fairs in all parts of the country. Nearly all the state fairs have been unusually successful, so have been district and county fairs everywhere. Minnesota has the best fair grounds and buildings in the Union, and no other state has so generously endowed its agricultural society. But in spite of all these favoring circumstances and conditions the Minnesota state fair proved to be a melancholy failure in nearly everything which constitutes a real agricultural exposition. Why did such an unsatisfactory consummation accompany such an array of favoring auspices? There are many reasons, a few only of which can be herewith noted.

There is now a widespread belief among agriculturists and others that the State Agricultural Society has been and is being used to further the political and otherwise selfish ambitions of men who have no knowledge of nor sympathy for the agricultural interests of the state. This naturally breeds distrust and alienates respect. The society's grounds have become the arena for exhibitions, pow-wows, hippodromes, meaningless parades and flunky receptions so completely non-agricultural that they not only outrage the good sense of the solid people of the state, but have largely overshadowed the legitimate features of fairs, and entirely eliminated their educational ones. This naturally alienates the patronage of farmers and all lovers of agriculture.

Law and custom have so molded the Agricultural Society of the state that its president and secretary are its factotums, autocrats of the hour, and shapers of the society's fortunes. Whenever a fair has been successful these officers have taken to themselves all the credit; in failures of management they should not be allowed to escape responsibility. As these officers are faithful or unfaithful, capable or incapable, intelligent or ignorant, so will the administration of the society's affairs be good or bad. There is a board of managers, it is true, but its wishes, even its orders, can be and have been ignored, disobeyed or neutralized by the officers named, and it has no recourse but to submit with the best grace possible.

At present the society is most unfortunately officered. Neither the president nor secretary were ever even remotely identified with the state's agricultural interests; neither of them know or care anything about the farmers of the state, their condition, tastes or wishes. They are so profoundly ignorant of all that pertains to agriculture that they would very likely mistake a crazy quilt supplied with a pair of horns for a Holstein cow. As ignorant of the agricultural forces and factors of the state as a Hottentot is of the Copernican system of astronomy. The president's brief experience in the state as a seller of farm machinery and a speculator in St. Paul real estate does not, in the estimation of our farmers, afford any justification for exalting him above the scores of good and true men who have spent the best years of their lives and performed most effective service in developing the agricultural interests of the state. It is safe to say that the secretary was never thought of in connection with anything pertaining to the farm until he was chosen to his present position. As a political worker he had some reputation and possible ability, but that does not, in the estimation of our farmers, qualify him for the position he occupies.

These are the men who assume to know what are the wishes and tastes of farmers and other good citizens, and presume to cater to them with claptrap and flap-doodle cowboy monkey business! Is it surprising that farmers and thousands of other good people stayed away, disgusted and insulted by the imputation that such stuff posessed attractions for them, that their tastes were so low, coarse and vulgar? Absence from the fair was the farmer's silent protest against the material used in making the society's executive officers, against the obnoxious methods and management herewith mentioned, and against other things that we have not the space to note at this time, but which we trust will be fully discussed by press and people of the state before the society's next annual meeting.

Meat Inspection Laws.

Farm, Stock and Home.

As suggested by Farm, Stock and Home some time ago, the passage of the inspection-on-the-hoof law by Minnesota's legislature last winter will be productive of good indirectly if not directly, even if the law is finally declared unconstitutional. Direct benefits from such legislation could have been realized only by the co-operation of several large states. If Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania and New York had joined hands with Minnesota—they came very near it—the Beef Combine would have gone to pieces in thirty days, and no one would have had any particular interest in annulling the laws. The indirect benefits are coming from the conspicuous prominence given to the methods of the Combine, and to the condition of our cattle interests, by the legislation and attempted legislation of last winter and the widespread agitation consequent thereon. This agitation is rapidly crystalizing into practical plans for the elimination of such iniquitous confederations as the Beef Combine from our economic system. If it shall be determined that states have no power over such conspiracies, then the general government can no longer ignore them. National legislation regarding illegitimate combinations is now inevitable, and one of the most potent forces in bringing about this desirable result is the much condemned meat-inspection laws of a few states. The reception accorded to the Senate Committee by the 'Big Four" is another force working towards a desirable consummation. The conspirators unconsciously did the despised public a most substantial favor when they insulted the Senate Committee. The Senate must now show its hand; it must elect whether to serve Monopoly or the people. Minnesota's legislature has no reason to be ashamed of the part it took in forcing the issues herewith referred to.

G. W. Fisk dropped in to leave $1.50 on subscription last week and to say that he was glad to see what THE JOURNAL has said about building a grist mill in Crookston. Said he: "I don't believe the business men in Crookston half appreciate the importance of this idea, for if they did I should think they would have a grist mill if they had to build it themselves. I have been at Red Lake Falls many times and have always seen from one to a dozen teams or more from my neighborhood with grists for the Red Lake Falls mills, and when one comes to know the number that go to Fertile, to Terrebonne and other places, the aggregate ought to be sufficient to keep one mill at least going night and day. All the wheat so ground ought to be, and could be, ground in Crookston if you had a grist mill. The merchant mill system does not suit farmers for many reasons, chiefly because the farmer prefers to have the product of his individual wheat." THE JOURNAL has for some time been convinced of the wisdom of having a grist mill here in Crookston, being well aware of the vast amount of business lost for lack of it, and not long since quoted an article from a Dakota paper showing that much wheat from there was annually sent to these same mills that Mr. F. speaks of, to be ground.

Lew Freeman while in the city on Thursday last dropped in to see THE JOURNAL man and leave three dollars on subscription. Said he: "I never paid a debt more cheerfully than this, as one single issue of THE JOURNAL saved me 25 times the amount; so I say success to THE JOURNAL."

The saleon Saturday was rather slimly attended, owing, doubtless, to the fact that farmers are pretty generally busy with their fall plowing. What stock was sold went at low prices. One thing is very apparent, the rapidity with which stock is being depleted this fall will send prices sky high in the near future and cause a big demand. The farmer who is able to buy up good stock at present prices and hold for the rise is sure to reap a rich reward in the near future, as stock all over the United States is being sold off for various reasons. We remember the time in New York when sheep were slaughtered by hundreds for their tallow, and the result was apparent the next year in the high price of sheep. The same result will follow in this case. The man who has cattle to sell next year will have a bonanza.

To people needing winter underwear, we would say call on us before purchasing and we will save you considerable hard cash.

Pete Misgen brought in a sample of yellow Dent corn raised on the farm of Mr. Edward Leo, in the town of Knute, which is as fine a sample as one could wish to see anywhere. Yellow Dent is not an early variety, and if it can be successfully grown, certainly there should be no trouble is raising the earlier varieties. Mr. M. E. Bartlett has raised excellent corn every year since he has been in the country, and this year has a patch containing four or five acres which is giving him a big yield of nice sound large ears that would make an Illinois farmer turn green with envy. While our climate may not be perfectly adapted to the raising of corn, yet experience shows that it will grow and can be ripened in sufficient quantities for home consumption. The farmer who raises a patch of corn each year has an excellent winter feed for milch cows.

HACK & GALLASCH.

It is an old saying that "one swallow does not make a season," by that same token neither does two, and it is not wise to conclude that because two crops have been but indifferent all will be hereafter. Human nature seems more prone to look upon the dark side of everything, and that fact is responsible for a large share of the misery the human race endures, for there never is a cloud without a silvery lining somewhere, and there is a bright side to everything if we but have the patience to find it. Should there be any among us disposed to be discouraged and wish to go elsewhere, we would ask such to pause and think it over before taking a rash step. Where in this wide world will you go to better yourselves? Every country has its drawbacks, and no country on earth is perfect. We know of no country on earth where seed time and harvest fail every year, and just so sure as the sun rises and sets, just so sure the good time is coming for this country. A comparison of this country to-day shows it in far better condition than many places east and west, and one good crop with good prices will place it far in advance. The condition of crops everywhere this year and last is really a blessing, disguised though it may be, to this country, as it hastens the day when good prices will reign for all our products.

On Thursday evening, as Mrs. A. E. Flanders and her daughter was enroute for the carnival Mrs. Flanders was suddenly stricken down on the street with paralysis. The new road has made commendable progress this week and would no doubt have been in before the 1st had it not been for the injunction. We trust the delay will be but temporary and that the road will reach the city on time. Doc. W. L. Doc. is one of the first veterinaries to practice in Polk County and his skill is too well known to need comment from us. For the present all orders left at the residence of his brother Al will receive prompt attention.

The Merchants carnival was a grand success in every particular. The receipts were $508. The ladies worked hard for the success of the affair and well deserve the encouragment they received. Upwards of sixty business firms were represented in the grand parade by as many handsome ladies. Mrs. John Hack received the elegant quilt. Everything went along smoothly and the carnival was voted a huge success.

The fire alarm called out the department on Friday evening to attend to a fine healthy blaze in Dave Vanatta's house, the Manitoba section house. The fire caught from a defective chimney upstairs and had made good headway before the department arrived, but the boys soon discouraged the fire and saved the lower portion of the building, notwithstanding they were bothered by rotten hose bursting which shut off the stream several times. We learn that much of the hose is in very poor condition and ready to be replaced. It is hard enough work to attend to a fire when everything is in apple pie order, and this matter should be attended to. Had the fire happened in a row of buildings anywhere, the time lost monkeying with poor hose might have been a serious matter.

COUNTY NEWS.

Red Lake Falls News.

Pierre Bottineau's friends were startled last week by the announcement that he had lost "three large, fat boys." It was three hogs, happily; not boys.

Joe Bray tells some great "goose stories" since his Mud Lake trip. He says while out at Black River last week trying his new gun he shot a goose that measured 17½ inches between the legs. This is doubtless the largest goose shot this year.

Crookston is to celebrate in a gorgeous manner the advent of the N. P. to that city on the first of that month. Our neighbors have cause to feel elated, as the N. P. is one of the best roads in the country, and it seems strange no effort was made by Crookston to secure it before now.

Mr. Spottswood, representing the wholesale hardware house of Janey, Semple & Co., was in town Tuesday. He is successor to Joseph Laurence in the firm of Stewart & Spottswood, of Crookston, and reports times on the road as unusually quiet.

Mr. Marleau met with a serious accident last Saturday evening at his place in the town of Red Lake Falls after returning home from this village. While unhitching his team, a span of mules, they suddenly started, causing the wagon pole to strike Mr. Marleau's leg below the knee, thus breaking it. The fracture is a bad one, and Mr. Marleau will necessarily be confined to his bed a long time.

John McKinnon, the rustler of the enterprising firm of McKinnon Bros., Crookston, spent a couple of days in town. John is looking after his collections, and has our sympathy if he has many to make.

Louis Laprie, of Osseo, came up Thursday, via Crookston. He went up to St. Hilaire, and through the country northeast of here looking for sheep to ship to Minneapolis. He did not succeed in buying the sheep, on account of their scarcity, and returned Saturday night.

Adolph Riechel reports a fine yield of buckwheat this year. Such a report brings us back to the mornings of last winter when, the thermometer standing 40 degrees below, we, disregarding the elements, ate of this world's best things in the shape of the newly-baked, hot buckwheat pancake besmattered with honey. As Mr. Riechel has a good supply of both honey and buckwheat for sale this year, we will use all honorable means to keep our credit good with him till spring at least.

A SUIT FOR DIVORCE.

Hattie M. Stearns Files a Lis Pendens in the District Court.

The Duluth News.

A document came from Crookston Wednesday notifying the district court officers that a petition for a divorce had been filed with the clerk of court for the Eleventh Judicial district, in which Hattie M. Stearns, wife of Judd G. Stearns, of this city, is petitioner. The document sent here is merely a lis pendens, which becomes a lien in $10,000 against lots 7 and 9, block 71, Endion division. Among other things the statement is made that the sum of $10,000 was obtained by defendant from plaintiff, which the latter wishes to recover. H. Steenerson is the plaintiff's attorney.

Mr. Stearns is known by most business men of the city, being the stenographer of the district court. He bears a good reputation and the only reason that can be assigned for the suit is incompatibility. The grounds for divorce are not stated in the document filed here.

Duluth Tribune: General Manager Fisher, of the Duluth & Winnipeg, now makes his headquarters at the Spalding. He says that it is the intention to build the road beyond the Mississippi River this fall if cold weather will permit them.

A STRANGE STORY.

Two Men Attempt to Hold up the Station Agent at Mallory in Minnesota.

A Mysterious Affair to Which the Station Agent Appears to Hold the Key.

Grand Forks Plaindealer.

A very singular circumstance occurred a few days ago a Mallory, the station on the Manitoba road about six miles east of this city. When train No. 4 from the west stopped at the station, two men got off and walked around the depot for awhile. After everyone but the agent had departed and while that official was preparing to leave, the men stepped inside the station as Mr. Miller, the agent, turned from the telegraph instrument to lock up his desk, the men rushed in and confronted him, between him and the desk, in which lay his revolver. The men demanded certain papers of the agent. Mr. Miller refused to give these up, whereupon one of the men and at the same time repeated his demand, saying: "Deliver them up or I'll shoot you."

DREW A REVOLVER,

The agent in this condition, was powerless, but he did not lose his nerve. His revolver was in his desk, and the men stood between it and him. He attempted to parley, when a sound was heard outside. It was the section boss, who had stepped into the waiting room for a moment. As the men turned to look at the intruder, the agent stepped back, and opening a door behind him sprang backward out of the room and slammed the door, leaving the men inside.

It was apparent that the men did not want to rob the agent or secure money, for they made no demand for cash nor did they attempt to get any, what they wanted was certain papers which they believed the agent had. The nature of these can only be surmised, as the agent their character. He was interviewed, but refused to shed any light on the subject at the present time. He says that the men came from Dakota, and as he formerly had charge of a station on the western end of the line, it is not unlikely that he had met the men there and had some dealings of a private nature with them. He says that he is anticipating another visit from them, but they will find him prepared for them.

The affair was seen by a young lady living across the track from the station, and believing that the men were going to murder the agent when they drew their revolvers she was so that she fainted. The section boss who was in the waiting room, says that he believes it was the intention of the men to kill the agent, if they did not succeed in getting the papers. The men as soon as they were foiled, stepped outside and under cover of darkness, quietly left the town on foot. It is believed that they came to this city. The whole affair has a most mysterious appearance, and not the least significant thing, is the unwillingness of the agent to talk about the matter, or divulge the nature of the papers, for which the men were so anxiously seeking. Mr. Miller, the agent, only says that the matter will probably be cleared up in time, and "guesses" that there is a sensation at the bottom of it.

CANADIAN EXCURSIONS.

For several years past the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has given a favorable opportunity to visit the Eastern Provinces of Canada through a series of low rate excursions.

The following announcement is made for the present season. From stations on its lines north of and including Winnipeg, Grand Forks and Crookston and west to Minot, tickets will be sold at excursion rates on the following days: Nov. 11th, 18th and 25th, Dec. 2d, 9th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d and 23d, 1889, and January 6th, 7th and 8th, 1890. Stop over privileges and 90 days time will be granted on these tickets, with 15 additional days time on payment of $5.00, or 30 days on payment of $10 extra. Tickets will be issued to points in Ontario and Quebec west of and including Montreal.

A choice of route will be given through the principal cities of the continent. The "Manitoba" train service is unexcelled, and with palace dining and sleeping cars the journey back to the scenes of early days will be made over this favorite line with comfort and luxury. Call upon or address any agent of the Manitoba Railway for full particulars regarding rates, baggage, sleeping berths, &c., or write F. I. Whitney, G. P. and F. A., St. Paul, Minn.

OUR PREMIUM.

THE JOURNAL acknowledges the receipt of several past due subscriptions and many new ones during the past two or three weeks, and wishes, while acknowledging these favors, to call attention to its premium whereby every subscriber receives a substantial benefit. We consider that THE JOURNAL is worth its price to every one, but as an inducement for payment in advance and payment this fall of the old account we have concluded to give every one of our patrons a liberal present. We therefore have made arrangements with Farm, Stock and Home by which we can give that excellent paper for one year to every paid up subscriber. We need all of the money now due on back subscriptions, and would esteem it an especial favor if those on whom we have waited for several years would call and see us. If it is impossible to settle this fall, call and see us anyhow.

Harvest is Past

And now is the time when the farmer, having worked (with) the hired man harder than ever during the long days of summer, feels that he can leave the boys to fodder the cattle and carry swill to the pigs, while he takes a stroll outside the farm fences, to see a little of the big world beyond. Unless he is a gentleman farmer, living in the east, he will not go to Europe, but try to see some of his own country, the Dakotas and the Pacific Northwest, or California and the Rockies. To do this, rail travel must be his means, and his enjoyment of the trip will depend much on his selection of a line. In whatever direction he goes, he will find "The Burlington" unparalleled for speed, safety and comfort, and can be supplied with tickets and any needed information, by the local agents of the line, or by writing to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agt. C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

HILL'S OPINION.

On the Consolidation of Railway Systems.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 19.—J. J. Hill, of the Manitoba railway, was interrogated by a reporter of the United Press relative to the Huntington railway trust as outlined in the Chicago Tribune, and railway trusts in general. Mr. Hill said that in any event the plan proposed was not a trust, but meant the ownership and control of the lines mentioned as one system. He said that he did not believe that the Santa Fe would be involved in a combination with the lines mentioned. In regard to railway trusts in general, Mr. Hill said that the time is fast drawing near when all the railroads of the country would be consolidated into perhaps six or seven great systems. He cited, as an example of this, the continued spread of Vanderbilt's system and said other railroads would have to consolidate in order to compete with such a gigantic enterprise. From Hill's remarks it is conjectured he regards this consolidation of systems as an essential necessity in order to compete with rival roads, and with that as his opinion it is believed there is more truth than he will divulge in the report of the consolidation of the Manitoba, Soo, South Shore and Atlantic, and an extension of the Manitoba system to the Pacific coast west from Great Falls. As to an extension of the line to the coast, Hill is said to have intimated it w be completed within two years.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., OCTOBER 24, 1889.

A powerful temperance story serial is now being written by Col. Thomas W. Knox for publication in the Toledo Weekly Blade, to commence early in December. Col. Knox is well known as the author of the "Boy Traveller" series, and his new story will be a revelation to people of all classes on both sides of the temperance question. Send postal card to Blade, Toledo, Ohio, for free specimen copy containing opening chapters. Send names of all your friends, also. See advertisement elsewhere.

St. James Journal: The farmer element is strong enough to capture every caucus and convention and send their kind as delegates to all conventions and thereby control all nominations and fill all offices, but while numerically weak the politicians are made strong by organization, and thereby are enabled to control everything, even to the farmers themselves. With one-half their organization the farmers could sweep everything, and it would not be necessary for them to go outside the old parties to do it. In either of the old parties they are in the majority and can, if they will, run them. Why don't they do it?

Farm, Stock and Home: The roasting being given to President Bushnell and Secretary Denny by the state press, for their mismanagement of the Minnesota fair, is extremely gratifying to every citizen who has a particle of interest in the reputation of his state. We have no space in which to fully quote even a few of the scathing said, but we are making a collection of them to use hereafter, and they will perform excellent service in "purging to a sound and pristine health" a badly demoralized agricultural society. "The chief attraction of 'Children's Day' was the mock robbery of a stage coach by highwaymen; the capture of a white maiden by Indians, and her gallant rescue by an enamoured cowboy, after the most approved style of the modern dime novel." "Considering the state's participation in such stuff, it is now in order for it to supply its schools with the lives of Claude Duval, Captain Kidd and Jesse James, as standard readers." "It was a jocky club meeting, a hugh hippodrome, a great circus, a wild west show, a realization of blood and thunder literature." These are a few typical comments culled from the multitude published.

"Peterson's" Thanksgiving number is among the handsomest of the November magazines. The numerous illustrations are all excellent, from the beautiful steel-engraving to the double fashion-plate. The literary contents are exceptionally strong. Frank Lee Benedict's serial is one of his best, and Alice Maud Ewell's "Wycham's Ordinary" is the finest and most dramatic of her productions. Howard Seely has a capital sketch, "A Thanksgiving in the Southwest," to which an illustrated story, "At Cross-Cut Farm," makes an admirable contrast. "Out of the Night," by Elizabeth Phipps Train, is a beautiful tale of Hollowe'en. Minna Irving contributes one of the loveliest lyrics we have read from her pen, and Mrs. Marion E. Pickering's poem, "Thanksgiving Day," is a gem. Miss Elizabeth Scovil, the Newport Hospital superintendent, gives a valuable paper on the treatment of burns. The needlework department offers any number of charming designs for holiday-presents. "Peterson" has a wonderful hold on its subscribers. Once taken, always taken, seems to be the rule in regard to it. And no wonder! for it is in every respect a thoroughly first-class periodical. The prospects for next year promises new contributors, new and larger type, and various other attractions, which cannot fail to keep "Peterson" far in advance of all the lady's-magazines. Terms: Two dollars a year. Club rates: Two copies for $3.50; three copies for $4.50, with a handsome premium to the getter-up of the club; four copies, $6.40; six copies, $9.00, with an extra copy of the magazine for one year to the getter-up of the club. For larger clubs, still greater inducements are offered. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. A sample-copy will be sent to anyone desiring to get up a club.

What Mr. Mills Will Do.

Toledo Blade.

Mr. Roger Q. Mills has already outlined the plan of the Democracy in the next House and has announced the determination of the opposition that the Republicans will not be allowed to pass a single measure without their consent. His utterances are so clear and apparently authoritative that it is well to give them, so that he can be placed on record. He says:

"For instance, you may depend upon it that the rules of the House will not be changed by the Republican majority in any essential feature. We do not propose to permit them to be changed, as is desired by Mr. Reed and others, in any particular feature. Nor will we permit any of the legislation looking to a control by congress of the elections, for we see very plainly what the purpose of that is. The same can be said of the contest cases that will come up before Congress. We do not propose to let the Republican majority to be further increased ad libitum by throwing out Democratic members, as seems to be the purpose. In other words, we propose to exercise control of the House just as much as though we were still in the majority, because we know our minority is strong enough to make us the virtual rulers."

Isn't Mr. Mills rather too previous in attempting the role of a dictator? Does he realize that the Republicans, now that the elections have taken place in the new states, will have a good working majority, and that it will not be in the power of Mr. Mills and his fellow Democrats to stop them if they choose to make changes which seem desirable; to turn out Democratic members who received their certificates of election by fraud, and put in their places Republicans who were elected, but were counted out?

When justice is done in this respect Mr. Mills will discover that the Democratic minority is not strong enough to make it a virtual ruler.

Besides Mr. Mills may not be permitted by his party associates to be their leader on the floor of the House. His attempted leadership in the last Congress was a lamentable failure, and caused great dissatisfaction among members who did not care to accept his dictum as law. The protection Democrats accuse him and Carlisle of being responsible for the party defeat because of his free trade tariff bill, and is it likely that they are going to follow blindly at the beck and call in future? Mr. Mills was a bad general in the last Congress, and it is not likely that his methods have been improved. He never could hold his forces together, and with many new recruits, some of whom are independent in their modes of thought and action, and others who are positively opposed to his extreme views upon the tariff, he will not be able to present a united party front except on rare occasions.

Still it is well that Mr. Mills has spoken. He has given the Republicans a warning of what they may expect. He has always been in the habit of boasting of what he and the Democratic party would do but, singularly enough, his assertions have failed of verification. Mr. Mills can talk, that's all.

Settlers Will Hold On to Lapsed Railroad Lands They Have Seized.

Minneapolis Times.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 17.—The commissioner of the land office in reply to a letter from an attorney of the Northern Pacific railway says the office will continue in its course as indicated some time ago refusing to take any action in the contest between the railway company and the settlers on land where the railroad is not completed within the time fixed by law, and preferring to leave the matter open until congress shall express an opinion relative to the claim of the railroad to take this class of land.

The Power of Whisky Illustrated.

Moorhead News.

The Minneapolis Tribune-Star speaking of the adoption of constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic in North and South Dakota, says: "Nevertheless we believe that the Dakotas have done unwisely and that they have thrown away a large part of a magnificent opportunity. At a time when immigration is most earnestly desired these new states appear to have put an enormous barrier in its way. The result cannot fail to be, that many thousands who had intended to settle there will go further west into the more liberal states of Montana and Washington. It is not easy to understand why our young western neighbors have decided to handicap themselves at the beginning of their career of statehood, but that is undoubtedly what they have done." According to this line of reasoning, immigrants are attracted more by free whisky than by free land. Probably the two Dakotas are willing that the kind of settlers that whisky has such an influence over, shall go "into the more liberal states of Montana and Washington."

VILLARD ON TOP.

His Financial Plan Adopted By the Northern Pacific.

Minneapolis Times.

NEW YORK, Oct. 17.—At the annual meeting of the Northern Pacific preferred stockholders yesterday Henry Villard voted a majority of the stock. Robert Harris, who was president of the company for many years, and who last year acted as chairman of the board of directors, is dropped from the directory, and so are Brayton, Ives, J. C. Bullitt, Fred Billings and John U. Brookman. The new directors are George A. Morrison, James B. Haggin, C. H. Leland, Charles C. Beamon and J. B. Williams. A slender minority of the stock was voted by Robert Harris in favor of reelecting the old board. Mr. Villard's financial plan was adopted by a large majority, and a resolution was adopted favoring the distribution of the preferred stockholders of the entire amount due them as soon as the directors are able.

THE GOOSE BONE SAYS.

It Will Be an Open Winter, if There's any Truth in the Bone Story.

New York Sun.

Henry Stillman, of Woodstock, is the goose bone prophet of Eastern Connecticut. He gets his bone from a goose that is hatched in May, and when Henry Stillman is bending over his goose bone to read the future each fall all Windham County is hushed, and it hearkens to the prophecy. Wiggins and De Voe, and even uncle Daboll, of Groton, who has been getting out "almanacks" yearly for the past 117 years, may do very well fumbling with the weather during the rest of the year, but when the first fall wind comes piping over the hills and the "frost is on the pumpkin," then Henry Stillman sits down with the goose bone, and something happens that is "tolerabl' sartin."

Mr. Stillman consulted the bone last week, and his prediction has been published orally all over the eastern end of the state. Prediction is a weak, narrow word to apply to the proclamation, for Mr. Stillman doesn't predict; he determines. It is going to be an open winter, he says, and "that settles it," says Windham County.

The magic bone, hanging by the side of Mr. Stillman's kitchen chimney and by which he ciphers out the season, shows a row of dots around its shank, and those dots announce what the temperature is going to be. The darker the spots the colder the weather is the reading of the bone. Then there are circular marks dividing the bone into three winter months. December occupying the space between the first partitions, January the next apartment, and February the remaining one. Mild, regular weather will prevail in all the months and it will be milder than even that of last winter. There will be a few days on which running water will freeze. The coldest weather will be in the latter part of January, when there will be some frosts of considerable severity. "Near the point of the bone," says the seer, "is a marked discoloration, indicating that the first day of winter will give decided intimation of the season's change." Christmas will be a green one, but it will be wet and cold. January will step in warm and sunny, but soon it will turn cold, though not very cold. The coldest day will be January 27th. "There is going to be a reg'lar old time Jiniwary thaw," and February will have a "thawey spell" too. October will be a cold, disagreeable month, with heavy rains and snows. There will be an early spring, but February will melt into March in a disastrous thaw in which the features will be swollen mountain streams and terrible floods.

Faith in the goose bone is invincible in this part of the state, and each year many farmers are wont to take one from the May goose, and it is dried and hung in the front hall or against the chimney in the kitchen. There it dangles until spring in the next year. The best bone is taken from a goose that has a trace of wild blood in its veins. But not every one can read a goose bone as Henry Stillman is able to do it.

Helena Journal: Let it never be forgotten that the so-called majority upon whose shoulders Joseph K. Toole expects to mount into the Governor's chair were 350 Dagoes, who were naturalized after Marcus Daly had sent them to be registered, and who voted in the American State of Montana by handing to the judge a plagard bearing these words:

"I can neither speak nor write the English language. I desire to vote the straight democratic ticket."

What a commentary on free government! The votes of those 350 Dagoes, not one of whom had the slightest interest in or concern for Montana, not one of whom had the faintest conception of the significance of their vote—the votes of these creatures are the votes by which Mr. Toole claims to be Governor. If this is a victory, how proud he must feel of his achievements.

FEARS OF WATER FAMINE.

Southern Minnesota Afflicted with a Drouth.

St. Paul News.

Gen. J. H. Baker, of Blue Earth County, was in St. Paul to-day, and in speaking of the drouth, he said:

"A water famine, with all its attendant inconveniences to the farmer, is what we fear now in Southern Minnesota. The little streams are all dry. The Maple, Cobb and all the small streams have no water except in occasional pools.

The Blue Earth and Minnesota Rivers are lower than ever before in the memory of the oldest inhabitant. The lakes have lowered rapidly in the last two months. Hundreds, and I may say thousands of farmers are hauling water for miles for the stock. I have seen as many as twenty wagons hauling water in barrels on a single afternoon. This tax upon the time of the farmer is simply immense.

But the gravest apprehensions exist as to the effect of a general freeze-up without rain. We are not liable to get rain in the fall, after the middle of October. I know of many farmers who will be forced to sell their stock should no rain fall. The extent of this terrible drouth, as well as the inconvenience and the possible danger is not fully appreciated by the public."

Wheat Will be Higher.

Prairie Farmer.

The State Department at Washington has received advices from the Consul at Mayence which states that—

European grain-crops have not turned out satisfactorily, and the United States is looked to to make up the deficiency. This is confirmed by reports from the international grain-market at Vienna, which meets every year for the purpose of furnishing reliable and disinterested reports of grain-crops of the year. The average wheat crop of Europe annually from 1881 to 1886 is 1,211,072,192 bushels. In 1888 the crop amounted to 1,240,370,925 bushels. This year is estimated to be about 15 per cent less. The average in wheat for all Europe is 81 this year, compared to 93 in 1888, and 110 in 1887.

This is in line as previously stated in The Prairie Farmer. The wheat crop of the world is short. When the bulk of the wheat crop is out of the hands of farmers, prices will jump. They are already advancing steadily.

Unsweetened Coffee.

The Western Rural.

Whenever the American people refuse to pay ten cents a pound for sugar, there will be no sale of that commodity. When there is no sale for it prices will come down, and when prices come down the sugar trust will be wrecked. How long would it take, if all would agree not to use sugar, to effect this result? One week. Now everybody is willing, perfectly willing, to say that ten cents a pound for sugar is robbery. Usually we decline to submit to being robbed, if we know it. We go without many things, too, because we cannot afford to pay the price for them. Many of us need new overcoats this winter, but we will get along with the old ones, because we cannot afford to buy new ones. Very few of us can afford to pay two prices for sugar, but while we wear our old overcoats without complaint, now and then people object to giving up the use of sugar. One man will say that we cannot put up fruit without sugar. Very well, that man's wife has probably got most of her fruit put up by this time. If she has not, suppose we wait until she has completed the work and then enter upon this work of self denial on the part of the people. Another will say that the tariff on sugar is the trouble. Well suppose that is true, is the country to be robbed of millions of dollars until the people get ready to take off the duty, simply because we are unwilling to practice a little self-denial? A man broken out with the small-pox comes walking along the street scattering the disease in every direction. Confound that man, the people may say. But that will not help the matter at all. If the fellow had kept out of the street, there would be no small-pox there. But he did not keep out; and the people gather up their children and with them hurry to the doctor to get them vaccinated. The operation hurts the child and there is nothing pleasant in it to the parent. But certain conditions exist that demand an immediate remedy. We may set a man with a shot gun at each end of the street to keep small-pox patients out in the future, but wisdom suggests that you get vaccinated as protection against what the fellow who did go through the street left behind him. And so we have a tariff. It cannot be removed at once, even if removing it would burst the sugar trust. We do not know when it will be removed, if ever. It may be and it may not be. But we want present protection against an existing condition of things.

And why should we not have it? Now just mark the reason which some will offer. It is simply this: We cannot drink our coffee unsweetened. Boiling it down, it is that we have an appetite for sugar that has the mastery over us, as the appetite for liquor or tobacco has the mastery over their victims; and we are fast. We cannot give up the indulgence for a week or two. We have no doubt that some who occupy this position have sometimes asked the drunkard: Why do you not stop drinking liquor? It is for every individual to say whether or not he desires to escape the sugar trust robbery. The Rural has been and is desirous only to save the people from the great wrong; and in asking them to express their willingness to do without sugar for a short time and to go to growing sorghum, it has pointed out the only present practical way of escaping the sugar trust robbery. Fortunately, as we think, for the people, the very large majority who write us upon the subject express a perfect willingness to do as we suggest.

BETTER WHEAT PRICES.

This Country Likely to be Called Upon to Increase her Shipments to Europe.

The following report, prepared by the Baltimore Journal of Commerce on the wheat supply and requirements of the of the United States, we submit to our readers as a fair and conservative statement of the situation:

"Estimates made in England place her requirements at 16,000,000 quarters; France, 2,000,000; Belgium, Holland and Germany, 3,000,000. Supplies are to come to the extent of 4,000,000 quarters from India, 15,000,000 quarters from the United States, and 11,000,000 quarters from Russia. England has never during the last five years imported less than 15,498,000 quarters, and after producing 9,000,000 quarters in 1884 imported 18,224,000 quarters in the same year. Last year saw these imports nearly equaled, and it is probable that the estimates on her wants this year are much too low. The average net imports for ten years of wheat and flour into France is 5,500,000, quarters and wants are placed by the United States statistical agent in Europe at 4,000,000 quarters. As to supplies India shipped a fraction over 4,000,000 quarters in the last crop year, and since the beginning of the present crop year, April 1, is nearly 1,000,000 quarters behind last year's movement. Chili, Argentine Republic and Australasia have a paltry 4,000 quarters on passage to Europe. Russia shipped 13,242,000 quarters in 1888, 8,500,000 quarters in 1887, and is looked to for 11,000,000 this year.

In large exporting districts in South Russia the production varies from 60 to 20 per cent. of an average. The heaviest crops as reported by the government are beyond reach of railroads and may be counted as nil in international commerce. Shipments since Jan. 1 show a decrease compared with last year of 400,000 quarters and 1887's output is not likely to be exceeded.

Although we produced 488,000,000 bushels this year a considerable portion is not suitable for shipment, and with stocks depleted as they were at the beginning of the crop year and demand such as the present situation suggests must result in values considerably higher than the present level."

Buffalo Journal: The Memphis Appeal boasts that the south to-day is the most prosperous section of the Union and is blessed with immense crops as well as a most delightful climate. And yet the editor of the Appeal sees the tide of emigration continue toward the "bleak and wintry northwest," and cannot understand why these things are so. The Merchants' Exchange, of Memphis, held a meeting to try and solve the mystery and change the tide of emigration to the south. They want more skilled labor in Memphis and manufactories. But they are so blind as not to see that their hopes will never be fully realized so long as the south holds to the old idea of slavery to the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. This is the doctrine of the white man's party now as it was before the war. This is the secret of the race war. It is only the negro because he was once a slave. The poor white man who labors beside the negro is just as much under the ban. The south must understand that labor is not degrading; that the negro is a citizen, and that all laborers must be free and independent citizens in the south as they are in the north before emigration will turn toward that sunny clime.

To trade young colts or sheep for good work horses? If so call on or address S. M. McKee, Crookston. [24-tf]

While our stock remains it will pay you to call and examine it before you purchase a cow, a heifer or a bull. We are receiving inquiries by mail daily and the stock is bound to go soon. THE JOURNAL returns thanks to those kind friends who have occasionally sent us local notices of friends visits and of a social nature and would request that they take pains to have their items reach us as soon as Wednesday noon to insure insertion that week. Sometimes we find a good item in our box on Wednesday evening which is too late for our use that week.

Some Nimshi advertised to drown Johnstown out again on Thursday evening of last week. Well, Nature did the best she could by causing an all day's rain but when the eventide was come the galoot did not show up worth a cent and he didn't even have the manliness to call at the office beforehand and notify us that the show was off, though he knew it on Wednesday morning.

R. P. Herrick informs THE JOURNAL that the Valley Roller Mill will give the farmers just as good satisfaction on their grists as any mill in the county can, and says it is needless for them to go to any other town for their flour. The Valley Roller Mill turns out first-class flour, that is a fact. Notice the reduction in their prices this week. Herrick says they are bound to suit the public if they don't lay up a cent.

Farmers

and large consumers go to Hack & Gallasch for everything they have at wholesale prices and no humbug.

What's the good of getting blue and discouraged if the crops were a partial failure. Will that remedy the evil? Is it not far better to look the future squarely in the face and with a brave heart do the best you can—trusting in Him who doeth all things well? Of course that is the best way but it takes a vast deal of manhood to do that way sometimes and yet it is by far the better way. It is in such crucibles that true manhood is tested.

We Go Out.

To get out of business and our prices tell the story. Come while the assortment is complete.

E. H. Love, of the Kittson County Enterprise is not only a good newspaper man but shows himself to be a shrewd stockman as well. Not many moons since he came down to Polk County and took out one of its best breeding horses—Star Bashaw, and now he has been down and taken a pair of choice cows. He was also largely instrmental in getting Everett away from us. Kittson County owes much to Mr. Love for what he is doing to build up her true interests.

Mrs. W. J. Hitchcock represented the live machinery firm of Collins & Creamer,—our own dealers—instead of the foreign concern, the Minnesota Chief Thresher Co., as our contemporaries would have their readers believe. It looks to us as though our own dealers should have all the credit to which they are entitled after having had to put up for the expense. The probability is that whoever furnished the information was a trifle careless and we do not doubt that the boys will cheerfully rectify the misstatement.

With two of the leading railroads of the country, who says that Crookston property at present prices is not cheaper than dirt? Now is the time to place your money for big returns.

Wm. Everett, who has been a resident of Polk County for the past summer, returned to his home near Pelican Rapids on Thursday evening. Likes Polk County so well that he says he shall be back again next spring.

Very many of our friends have called at THE JOURNAL office this week to square up that little subscription. Thanks, friends. This is what encourages us all to work and hope for the good time coming in the near future.

Parties living along the Fosston branch, in the timber, can secure a good bargain on Holstein cows and heifers, and pay in wood delivered on track. We have a choice lot of young bulls and heifers from four to six months old. Write us about them, or better yet, come and see them.

When railroads go to war common people don't seem to have any rights The Fosston train was not sent out on Tuesday because the Manitoba was too busy trying to prevent the D., C. & N. R. R., coming into the city. We supposed the Manitoba road was under contract to carry the mails on that line.

Frank Steelman was in from Mentor on Monday on business. Mr. Steelman is one of those gritty farmers who always look on the bright side and with iron will attempts to make the best of all untoward circumstances. It is this indomitable, unconquerable spirit that took this continent as a wilderness and brought it to its present proud position on the roll of Nations.

Too Numerous

too mention, we cannot list prices as everything with us are bargains. Come early and get the plums.

HACK & GALLASCH.

Kittson County gets a grand acquisition in the bunch of stock that Glidden and Love took to Hallock on Friday morning. Everitt, the thoroughbred Holstein-Friesian bull that Mr. G. purchased, is one of the best animals in the noted herd of Messrs. Wilcox & Ligget, which herd contains some of the deepest milkers in that noted breed. We have a few more choice heifers, cows and spring calves, and other Kittson County parties are figuring on them. We regret very much to see such an animal as Everitt leave Polk County, but what is Polk County's loss is Kittson County's gain, and we are glad that our neighbors secured him. His owner is one of Kittson County's leading farmers, a man who knows a good thing when he sees it. He got a big bargain in Everett.

MONY TO LOAN.

I. U. Jennings is prepared to loan money on city and farm property. [18-tf]

Ed. H. Love, editor of the Kittson County Enterprise, and Eugene Glidden, one of Kittson County's leading farmers, came down on Wednesday night's train and on Thursday went with us over to the farm and purchased a choice lot of animals. Mr. Glidden bought five, including Everett, No. 904 H. H. B., and Mr. Love took two choice cows. As the price of cattle rules low this fall and as we have a few more than we care to winter, the boys secured a grand bargain, and came over from the farm as happy as larks, if it did rain all the way. The foundation stock of that bunch is the famous herd of Wilcox & Liggett, Benson, Minn., in which are some of the grandest milkers in the country. Among them Sijtji Bleeker, who, in 16 days, gave 65 pounds of milk more than her live weight. She gave 1,185 pounds in the 16 days, her live weight being 1,112. The herd is composed mostly of the Aaggie and Netherland families, and the purchases of Messrs. Glidden and Love show their connection by strong family resemblance. One of Mr. Love's cows is a perfect picture of a thoroughbred Aaggie cow. They made a very nice selection, taking nothing but the highest grades and full bloods, and their purchase is a grand acquisition to the stock interests of Kittson County.

Now is your chance to secure choice breeding stock. While our stock lasts we shall make prices and terms to suit customers. We have more than we care to winter and while the surplus remains we are prepared to give great bargains. Write us or call and see us.

Lots of hay upon the market last Saturday. The first on the market sold at $6.50 per ton. In the afternoon it sold at $5. All who have stock to carry through this winter had better catch onto all of the $5 and $6 hay they can get. They cannot invest their money to better advantage.

Only Eleven Left.

We have only eleven spring calves—bulls and heifers—to dispose of. If you want to secure a rare bargain in Holstein stock call early for choice.

Money seems to be plenty this fall at 9 per cent. with no bonus. What a contrast to the fall only a few years since when it was almost impossible to get a loan on first-class security, and when you did the bonus required made the loan cost 20 per cent or higher. It is not the best thing in the world to be obliged to borrow, but when one has to, it is better to be able to get it at 9 per cent. than 20. That is about the only consolation a poor crop affords.

Money to loan in large or small sums on good farms. Choice farms and city property for sale. CHAS. M. LOWE, [17-tf] Broadway, Crookston.

By some means THE JOURNAL last week neglected to mention the invitation that we received to attend the seventh annual ball of the Crookston Fire Department, which was an oversight which we regret. Ever since its organization the department has been a power for good in the city and has saved much valuable property, and they deserve to have a big turn-out to-night. Every business man in town should have a ticket for the ball whether he attends or not.

The new road reached the point of intersection with the Manitoba road, the northwest corner of section 9, in Fairfax, on Friday of last week. Here she struck a snag in shape of a blockading outfit of the Manitoba road which delayed operations a good bit. As the road has fulfilled its obligations as far as possible it should receive the bonds even if they do not happen to have the depot quite completed on the exact minute named in the bond. They would no doubt have been here all in good shape only for this obstruction, and it is possible they will anyhow.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings has just received a new stock of fall and winter millinery. Especial attention is called to her selection of ribbons, silks, plushes and pattern hats all in the latest shades and styles. She is still determined to keep up her reputation for low prices.

The result of the labors of the committee appointed to treat with the Indians for the cession of their lands will be the opening of the Red Lake Reservation to settlement at an early day, as they have obtained a large majority of the signatures of the Indians interested. This cannot fail to be of advantage to Crookston in bringing in a large immigration and establishing headquarters for the lumber trade here. The probability is that Crookston will see a bigger boom than she ever had or has ever dreamed of, and her future will be a prosperous one. It may take two years to get everything in shape for the opening of the Reservation, but its opening will bring Crookston to the front as nothing yet has done, then all who have stayed by her varying fortunes will reap a rich reward. To-day property can be bought at figures that will easily double as soon as the Reservation is ready for occupancy, and the fact that this event is not far away should lend a greater stability to prices. The vast amounts of timber to be manufactured into lumber here should be a sufficient warrant for big investments, as everybody knows the significance of a big lumbering city. Before 1900 the citizen of Crookston will look back with wonder at the low prices of real estate in 1889, and wish he had a chance to catch onto blocks of it at these prices. The wise man will quietly invest now and calmly await a sure fortune in the rise. That Crookston will be the leading town in the Valley there can be no doubt.

Comrade Jas. K. Magie, of Washington, D. C., sent us a present last week that we value very highly and for which he has our heartfelt thanks. Comrade Magie says:

I enclose you a copy of an ambrotype of Mr. Lincoln taken August 25th, 1858, 31 years ago. I was with Mr. Lincoln when it was taken, and he sat as a favor to me. I was with him the evening before when he wrote the questions propounded to Mr. Douglas at the Freeport debate, and debated them with him and with Hon. Joe Medill, of the Chicago Tribune. We three were together at a hotel in the village of Macomb, McDonough County, Illinois. I sold the original to the Century Magazine. Yours, truly, Great Excitement.

The St. P., M. & M. R. R. and the D., C. & N. R. R. Lock Horns Over the Crossing of the Former.

When the D., C. & N. R. R. reached the point of crossing the St. P., M. & M. R. R., about three miles east of the city on Friday last they found the crossing blocked by an engine and a few cars and themselves enjoined from crossing. They did not try to force their way but went to the town board of Fairfax and secured the right to cross temporarily on the public highway. The St. P., M. & M. folks rallied their forces and prevented the crossing at that point, also during Saturday though no special efforts were made in that direction, the D., C. & N. folks confining their attention to hauling material and constructing track on this side of the track. On Sunday the excitement ran high and hundreds went out from the city to see the fun. Save the arrest of the St. P., M. & M. superintendent the roadmaster and an engineer there was no special excitement.

On Saturday as the wife of engineer Sebastian and another lady was driving out to the scene of the railroad war their pony became frightened at a bicycle and suddenly bolted upset the buggy throwing the occupants to the ground. Mrs. S. was rendered unconscious and was taken to the residence of Chris Houston. At last accounts she was doing nicely though unable to be out.

J. R. Ford Esq., who had the misfortune to break his leg last summer is able to be about the streets again almost as good as new. He informs THE JOURNAL that Dr. Just, who set the limb performed the operation very skilfully and that when it has thoroughly healed he thinks he shall suffer no inconvenience from it.

Obituary.

HARRIET L. HART FLANDERS, wife of A. E. Flanders, died at the family residence on Main Street on Friday morning Oct. 18th 1889. Mrs. Flanders, daughter of Walter and Lucy Hart, was born in Parishville, New York, February 5th 1843 where she grew to womanhood, uniting with the Baptist church at that place about 15 years ago. About five years ago Mr. Flanders came to Crookston, where he worked at his trade for two years when his wife joined him and has been a resident of the city since, uniting with the Baptist church here. Her death was sudden and its attendant scenes peculiarly sad and pathetic. In company with her mother and her daughter on Thursday evening she had started to attend the Merchants' carnival. When a few steps beyond the Cleveland house, two blocks from home, the daughter remarked to her grandmother: "How thickly mother speaks, do you notice it?" Mrs. Hart became alarmed and listened but Mrs. F. did not speak and appeared to be walking more slowly and with difficulty. Mrs H. turned and looked in the face of her daughter and saw at once that something was wrong, so bidding her granddaughter take one side of her mother she took the other and they started for home, hoping to reach there before Mrs. F. should fall. When within a few doors of home Mrs. Flanders sank to the sidewalk. The daughter hurried home for her father who came at once and bore the inanimate form home and a physician was summoned but nothing could be done. Mrs. Flanders lingered until 2 a. m., Friday morning when she passed peacefully to rest. A year ago last summer she suffered a slight shock of paralysis but she had been apparently well of late, only that she complained of a very tired feeling at times saying that it seemed as though she never would get rested. Her son Fred, who is married and lives at Warren happened to come down on Thursday's train and so was at the death-bed of his mother. Mrs. Flanders leaves to mourn her loss an aged mother, a husband and and two children, Frederick and Laura. The funeral services were held at the Baptist church on Sunday, attended by a large concourse of friends and acquaintances, and the remains were gently laid to rest in Oakdale cemetery.

Marshall County Leader: Mr. Thos. Topper sold to H. G. Palmer this week cheese amounting to $297.92. He brought in two loads of cheese returning him more than $300. This is but a small part of the entire amount he has received this season from the dairy. Figures speak more eloquent than words in behalf of stock raising and later on with Mr. Topper's consent, we will publish more concerning the results he has obtained in this departure from wheat raising. Mr. Palmer is shipping cheese and butter to Tacoma, Washington, where he has a son engaged in the commission business.

OUR PREMIUM.

The Journal acknowledges the receipt of several past due subscriptions and many new ones during the past two or three weeks, and wishes, while acknowledging these favors, to call attention to its premium whereby every subscriber receives a substantial benefit. We consider that The Journal is worth its price to every one, but as an inducement for payment in advance and payment this fall of the old account we have concluded to give every one of our patrons a liberal present. We therefore have made arrangements with Farm, Stock and Home by which we can give that excellent paper for one year to every paid up subscriber. We need all of the money now due on back subscriptions, and would esteem it an especial favor if those on whom we have waited for several years would call and see us. If it is impossible to settle this fall, call and see us anyhow.

"SEND US RAIN."

Minnesota Farmers Praying for More Moisture.

St. Paul News.

Faribault, Oct. 25.—Reports from all over this county of the terrible drouth are pouring in, and unless rain, and plenty of it, comes before winter sets in the effect will be terrible. A great many wells are now dry. Many farmers in this vicinity haul water six miles for watering cattle and for household use. There is fear that the Faribault water works wells will give out, which will leave the city in a very bad condition. The only method now for those whose wells have already gone dry is to deepen them or haul water.

Resolved by the city Council of the city of Crookston:

All lumber to be used in constructing said sidewalk is to be of at least as good quality as first common white pine lumber, and such sidewalk is directed to be laid upon the lines and grade given by the city engineer.

Oregon.

It is not many years since one of our foremost American poets wrote—

> —"Where rolls the Oregon, and > Hears no sound save his own dashings."

The word "Oregon" was doubtless used by poetic license for the Columbia river, and the whole couplet is now a mere poetic fancy—a shadowy reminiscence. Oregon is now linked by numerous steel highways to the rest of the Union, and the bustle of commerce drowns the dashings of the river. A numerous, industrious, intelligent people are making a magnificent state, and still there is room for thousands more to a fertile soil, a genial climate, and a hospitable society. The best route for all who visit Oregon on business or for pleasure is "The Burlington" going either via St. Paul and Minneapolis or via Kansas City, Omaha or Denver. Tickets can be had of any local agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

CAUGHT AT LAWRENCE.

Wm. A. Hymes, the Alleged Crookston Forger Arrested in Kansas.

He was Searched for all Through the Northwest by Pinkerton Operators.

The History of a Piece of Difficult Detective Work--Hymes' Career at Crookston.

St. Paul Dispatch.

The St. Paul agency of the Pinkerton Detective bureau is to be credited with another clever piece of detective work, resulting in the capture of William A. Hymes, the Crookston agent for the Minneapolis Mutual Fire Insurance company, on charges of forgery and fraud.

Hymes is a young man about 30 years of age, about 5 feet 8 or 9 inches, weighing perhaps 320. His blonde hair was cut short, his face was florid and full and much pitted with small-pox; beneath one eye was a long scar, running down his cheek a couple of inches. His face was clean shaven, and, altogether, he is a noticeable and rather a disagreeable looking man. His parents live at Rochester, in this state, and in September, 1888, Hymes was a resident of Minneapolis. Towards the end of that month he obtained the Crookston agency for the above named company, and went into business partnership in that city with a Mr. R. G. Marlette, a respectable citizen of Crookston. While occupying this position Hymes took advantage of his opportunities and it is alleged he forged a large number of checks and raised dozens of notes obtained from farmers and others in the district. It is also charged that he defrauded Mr. Marlette out of about $1,000. Altogether it is alleged Hymes raised from $3,000 to $4,000 by these practices, among his reported victims being T. B. Herriott, the postmaster at Edna, Minn., whose note of $179 was raised, and Miller, Foote & Sweat, a Crookston firm, whose note of $8.50 was raised to $23.50. Among other acts, Hymes had married a half-breed woman, but when he had made up his mind to skip he collected his plunder, and deserted her, simply leaving a letter for her containing $35, and the advice that she lookout for herself.

The case was handed to the Minneapolis police to look up, and Inspector Hoy, who is said to have had charge of it, failed entirely in locating Hymes. On Jan. 12, 1989, General Manager Spencer, of the insurance company, gave the case into the hands of Supt. McGinn, of the St. Paul Pinkerton agency, and since that time Mr. McGinn's operators have been at work on the case, finally running him down at Lawrence, Kansas. The whereabouts of his relatives was discovered also that his half-breed wife and baby came to Minneapolis and stayed with her sister and brother-in-law for a time, leaving, as is supposed, to join Hymes before the detectives were aware he was in the city. The greatest difficulty was encountered in acquiring information, as the Hymes appeared to be posted and kept their mouths shut. Dakota, both North and South, Minnesota, Montana, Washington and California were searched on false clues, and finally a trace was found in Sioux City, Iowa. The city marshal, Shanley, of that town was asked to co-operate with the Pinkerton operators and agreed to do so, receiving pay for his services in the regular form. On the 19th of this month Shanley telegraphed Supt. McGinn asking what a straight pointer as to Hymes' whereabouts was worth. A sum was named, and the day following Shanley telegraphed that Hymes was in Lawrence, Kan., and that he was there under arrest. Mr. McGinn at once wired the Kansas City agency, and Operator Howard was sent down to Lawrence, where he is now looking after the case.

A requisition was issued by Gov. Merriam to-day for Hymes, and it will be forwarded to Lawrence to-night.

It is stated by Supt. McGinn that Mr. E. P. Pierce, the attorney for the insurance company at Crookston, has a large collection of forged and raised notes, the handiwork of Hymes.

A Winter Vacation.

Do you think that sounds strange? Probably because you are a city dweller and take your vacation in the dog days. The farmer, however, and there are more of him than of you, is too busy in the summer, and if he has a play spell of any length, must take it when the season's work is over and the crops housed or sold. The farmers of Northern Minnesota and Dakota find this the practicable time to visit the old home in New England or Canada, and that winter is, after all, the best time for social pleasures. There are the long evenings, when the sleighride, the apple-paring, the country ball are in their glory, and have charms that completely overshadow all that can be had by chasing pleasure at heated summer resorts. When getting your ticket for your winter visit east, ask your agent to send you over "The Burlington," or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

POPULAR HOTEL DOWNED.

The Clifton Rents Too High, and Manager Baker Assigns.

St. Paul Globe, Oct. 24.

The Clifton Hotel is no longer in the hands of J. B. Baker. He made an assignment yesterday to Archibald D. McLeod. The trouble with the Clifton hotel is, as one of the best hotel men in the city remarked, that the rent is altogether more than the house will stand. The house is rented by Mr. Baker from Capt. A. R. Capehart on a five years' lease. The rent increases gradually every year; this year it is $800 a month, next year it would be $900 and the following $1,000. This was found to be more than was consistent with making the house pay. Mr. Baker has managed the hotel as well as was possible, and made himself a large crowd of friends, but with the house full all the time, such an incubus as he was forced to carry in the shape of the lease, must have eaten up all the profits. Capt. Capehart has been asked several times to reduce the rent, but declined to do so. Negotiations for the sale of the hotel have been pending for some time, with more than one party, but each man found when he came to deal with the owner of the property that there was no prospect of making the house pay at any such rent. Mr. Baker, therefore concluded that the best thing he could do was to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. This was done yesterday. The assets and liabilities have not yet been figured up, but it is thought Mr. Baker will be able to meet all his liabilities. So far as the general public is concerned this will make no difference. The house will run as usual pending an arrangement which may be consummated in a few days. Should Mr. Baker be compelled to retire from the hotel business, he will retire with the best wishes of a host of friends who sympathize with him in his misfortune. He has been one of the most popular hotel men in St. Paul during the few years he has been running the Clifton.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

CROOKSTON, MINN., OCTOBER 31, 1889.

Gentle Philanthropists.

Ballston Journal.

Who says that this is an unfeeling world? Who affirms that the sky is cloudy, and the future dark, and the atmosphere bleak, and that existence is a burden, and not a boon? If any such there be, he has plainly not kept his ears open and heard the good wishes and intentions breathed around him. Are these not philanthropists in embryo? Who is the stylish looking lady whose toilets are always ravishing, who is forever talking about her pity for the poor, and who is going to build asylums for the maimed, the halt, the lame and the blind as soon as Providence places the means in her hand? You say you do not believe in any philanthropy that is not active? That a man or woman whose heart yearns over humanity and who brims with projects for their welfare will always even amid poverty, find a way for a more active benevolence than mere gush and sentiment.

Perhaps you are a miserable, abject cynic, who has no faith in the genuineness of fine sentiment, no soul-simulating belief in God and the immortality of the soul, no aspiration after a higher and purer life. But we are inclined to suspect that, if you disbelieve in the sincerity of many gentle philanthropists who mount the rostrom and talk about benefitting the human race, and do not even benefit it by their talk, you are, after all, a sensible man, capable of discriminating between husk and kernel wheat and tares.

The world is full of this mock philanthropy; with people who are benevolent on paper and martyrs in conversation and in the pulpit and on the stump. They save the outcast and relieve the destitute, and raise the fallen and convert publicans and sinners into useful members of society, in imagination, and put this suppositious well doing to their own account, devoutly fancying that they are thus laying up in heaven those moral treasures which moth and rust cannot corrupt, and the safety of which does not depend upon a patent burglar alarm.

But these utilitarian praters, these public-spirited promulgators of gush, make very poor workers. If their right hand ever did anything worth doing, you may be sure that their left hands would not only know all about it, but find a way of letting the world know, too. If you wish to test your spouter of benevolence, bring to his knowledge one deserving case, the genuineness of which he can prove with a little trouble, and then see whether, in the first place, he will take that trouble, and, in the second, whether he will take five dollars from his pocket in order to relieve it.

Producer's and Consumer's Prices.

Farm, Stock and Home.

There is much discussion in farm papers now a days of the wide margin between the price of beef on foot and on the block. The margin is both enormous and unnecessary, but why confine the discussion of beef alone? The same wrong is present in every department of the farm economy. Over a large portion of Minnesota milk was sold by farmers—during the summer for six cents a gallon; in no city or town of any considerable size could a mechanic, laborer or any other consumer buy a gallon of milk for less than 20 cents. Just think of it! a margin of 233 per cent. profit between the price realized by the producer and that paid by the consumer on so common and necessary an article of human food as milk! And in many cases the producer and consumer live but a few miles apart.

The 60 cent wheat of the farmer is transmitted into the equivalent of nearly double that sum when it finds itself in the consumer's flour barrel. The farmer's 25 cent potatoes become quite luxurious living by the time they reach the table of the city mechanic; and millions of desires for green peas, beans, cucumbers, corn, etc., go ungratified every summer because of prices which make them unattainable, while they scarcely bring their producers enough to pay for marketing.

There are among the penalties the toiling millions—the really useful members of the society and the state—are compelled to pay to a social and economic system which rewards the drones and starves the workers in the great hive of human industry. These unparalleled profits of middle men are largely the direct fruits of centralization of population in large centers, a centralization which has enhanced prices of real estate so enormously in certain localities that to pay interest on its valuation rents must be so high that nothing short of robbing producers and extorting from consumers will pay them. Certain acres in any of our large cities are earning their owners good interest on a valuation of a million dollars each, while those farms are rare indeed, which pay any interest at all on a valuation of $25.00 an acre. The million dollar acres in cities are the obstacles which prevent interest making on the $25.00 acres, or even the $10.00 acres, in the country; and the channels in which the city valuations work are indicated by the margins noted between producer and consumer. The way out of a difficulty of this kind must come, if it ever comes, through the slow processes of time. It is refered to here as a suggestion to those of our economic students who are trying to find out "what ails American agriculture." The prices of its products are depressed because of curtailed consumption, caused by prices which make the free use of the products impossible to millions of the country's toilers, and the prices, in turn, are largely the result of the excessive valuation of city property. But the lords of the cities keep pegging up the prices, and industriously work to widen and strengthen the barrier between producer and consumer, with no thought of any but themselves, and of nothing but their bank accounts.

A Live Question.

Magnificent as is the outlook in the new Northwest—the two Dakotas, Montana and Minnesota—the climate militates against it in the minds of some. The "rustlers" of this section regard the snapping cold of winter as simply "bracing," and go about their business with an additional vim, but many who were born and bred in softer climates are looking for a country where King Borealis does not hold sway quite so long. To such we would say that Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee and Arkansas have plenty of cheap and fertile lands, and a winter climate unsurpassed in agreeable softness. To reach any of these states from the Northwest, "The Burlington" is unquestionably the favorite route, having its own line from Minneapolis and St. Paul to both Chicago and St. Louis, and an unrivalled equipment. For tickets, information, etc, apply to your local R. R. agent, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Men at the Feast.

Western Rural.

Some one has said that the labor question, like the question of slavery, is an irrepressible conflict, and that is true. It is a question that must be settled. We once walked with the owner over an immense Illnois farm. It was one of the largest farms in the state. The owner said to us in the course of conversation: The man whom I employ at a dollar and a half a day, and who lives in a hovel, enjoying scarcely the necessaries of life and none of the luxuries, looks at this big farm and at me as its owner and says: something is wrong in this world. It was a frank and true acknowledgement. Something is wrong. We will grant that all men are not equally industrious, equally economical or of equal ability. We will grant that one man may make money where another could do nothing. But these facts come nowhere near explaining why one man makes a million of dollars in a few years while thousands and millions never accumulate a dollar of surplus. We know of workshops and factories in which thousands of men work year in and year out. They are not extravagant. They live humbly. They have little recreation. Their surroundings are the surroundings of modest poverty; and after years of toil they die poor and leave their families dependent. Well, what is the trouble? Is there no money made in the workshop and factories in which these men are employed? Oh, yes! While these people are living in poverty, the owners of these places of business are accumulating wealth, living like princes and wasting more in one month than their workmen consume in six. Yet every dollar that is made in these workshops and factories is made by the sweat of the poor man's brow and the wear of the poor man's muscle. In other words, he creates something and somebody else absorbs the creation.

Some one—we do not remember who at this moment—has drawn a graphic picture of the producing millions and of a magnificent feast and of the guests who sit down at the loaded tables. He paints the farmer sowing and reaping; he pictures the magnificent harvests that are garnered from the fields, wet with the sweat of toil; he holds up the luscious fruit that labor has grown and plucked and preserved; he places in the picture the man who is constructing the railroad and the men who build and operate the cars to carry the wealth of the fields to the market; he draws the picture of the men in the bowels of the earth digging out the coal and the precious metals; he shows the workshop and factory filled with the toiling thousands that are turning out machinery and furniture to make the nation prosperous and homes elegant; he brings to view the great army of toilers who are building elegant cities and palaces for men to live in. He shows what a magnificent picture labor and labor alone has created.

Then he spreads the banquet, a banquet made of the fruits and the bread that labor has created; a banquet spread on tables that labor has elegantly carved and in palaces that labor has constructed. Then he asks: Who sits down at the banquet? Are they the people who have produced these things? Are they the men who have made the world rich and comfortable and elegant? No, not one of these is at the table. The company is composed of those who have created nothing, but live to absorb what others create. They are the well dressed idlers—the leeches upon our industries; and the startling picture shows the monstrous injustice that is being practiced upon the masses. It is foolish, suicidally foolish for any class to suppose for one moment that this injustice can be perpetuated with impunity. The labor question is an irrepressible conflict, and in a country like this, where men have been trained to believe that one man is just as good as another man, and that the declaration of independence is true, men will have their rights sooner or later. They will sit down to our tables when the feast is spread; they will have an equitable division of the fruits of their labor. They will not live in hovels while the Vanderbilts build stables elegant enough for society to dance in. We do not mean to say that the masses are ready for an open rupture. We believe that good judgment will prevail and patriotism will triumph, and through the ballot-box the people will achieve their victory. But we do say that the man who thinks that a few hundred can continue to rob the millions is the veriest fool that ever lived.

Privates Looking Up.

Western Rural.

For twenty-five years the Generals and the Colonels have been having it pretty much their own way. Shoulder straps have been on top. If there was an office to fill or any sort of a fat job to be disposed of, shoulder straps got it. It has never been claimed that all the brains of the army was in the officers. There were just as good heads in the ranks as there were on the staff. But human nature is inclined to worship tinsel. A reference to Private so and so causes nobody to turn his head to see the person referred to. But if anybody says General every eye will be turned. We have no objection to putting a General or a Colonel in a good position, if there is anything to him but shoulder straps, but The Rural, having a very soft side for the masses, delights to see the Privates get something. The Governor of Illinois was a private, and a corporal was selected for pension agent.

We have been led to make these remarks from reading the report of Gen. Sigel's resignation some time since. An investigation of the New York pension office, over which Gen. Sigel presided, had been going on for some time, and recently the examiners made their report to the Commissioner, who was then in New York. It showed a bad state of affairs in the office, but did not in any way reflect upon the integrity of Gen. Sigel. As the Commissioner expressed it "the General had been too trustful and had been plundered by his subordinates." The next day General Sigel went to see the Commissioner of Pensions and the latter read the report and assured him that it did not reflect upon his honesty. The General said he wanted to resign. "I tell you," said the Commissioner, "it was pathetic. I could remember how Gen. Sigel's horse splashed mud over me as I stood in the ranks and he galloped along the line with his splendid staff, and here he was, a broken old man, offering me his resignation. And so I want people to understand that Gen. Sigel's personal record in the New York pension office is clean."

Montana, the Golden.

Of all the newer states of the Union, bright as are the prospects they offer to the energetic and industrious, perhaps Montana presents the most alluring of any. To the stock breeder and the rancher, the extensive ranges, which will necessarily always be grazing lands, offer exceptionally advantages; the miner and prospector may realize fortunes, and are sure of gratifying returns from the varied and inexhaustible mineral resources; while the millions of acres of fertile government and railroad lands, only waiting for settlement, will afford homes for thousands of the landless in the crowded central portion of the country. To all residents of the Mississippi Valley "The Burlington" offers, via St. Paul and Minneapolis, the best and quickest route to Montana. Apply to local agents, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Salting Stock.

The Prairie Farmer.

With some kinds of stock especially, too much salt will often prove very injurious; and when the salt is only given occasionally it will often occur that the animals, being very hungry for salt, will eat more than is best. On the other hand, as a rule, if a supply of salt is kept convenient, the stock will eat what they want, and no more. They are not likely to damage themselves, under ordinary conditions, if boxes are provided, and are kept filled, so that the stock can help themselves to what they want to eat. It is not the quantity they eat, in a given length of time, but rather the large quantity that they will eat at once, when they have been deprived of it, that proves more or less injurious.

There is no class of stock kept upon the farm but that will be benefited, by having access to a good supply of salt, and some arrangement should be made so that this can be done. During the season that stock are in the pasture, boxes or troughs may be placed in convenient places, where the stock can go and help themselves.

The advantage in using rock salt is that if placed in boxes or troughs without shelter there is but little if any waste, either by throwing out of the boxes or troughs in eating, or by being washed out by hard rains. A box placed in the center of the hog-pen and kept supplied with salt and ashes, will aid materially in keeping the hogs in good health and thrift. Sheep, cattle and horses need a supply all the time; and if it is placed where they can secure a supply readily, they will be found eating a small quantity every day.

As a rule, with the exception of hogs and poultry, the better plan is to give the salt by itself. With poultry, usually the better plan is to season the food.

DULUTH AND WINNIPEG.

Track Laying Pushed on—An Important Meeting to be Held.

Duluth Herald.

Reports from the front state that track laying on the Duluth and Winnipeg road is going on rapidly and successfully. Both night and day crews are at work. The road has leased all the equipment in needs in construction work from the St. Paul and Duluth, and is negotiating for its own freight equipment, much of which will probably be made at Duluth. Although there is no intention of carrying on grading beyond the Mississippi River this winter, surveying parties are now pushing westward from the river. A level country, free from the "impassable bogs and morasses," which J. J. Hill, of the Manitoba, claimed would prevent his road building directly southeast to Duluth from Crookston has been passed over, and the grading will be easy.

A meeting of the officers and directors of the Duluth and Winnipeg road will be held in New York early in November, at which very important action will be taken. It is likely that the future steps to be taken by the company, now quite generally misunderstood by the public, will be made plain. It is also expected that steps will be taken toward carrying out the road's plans for terminal facilities, shops and the like at this city and for the construction here of extensive iron ore docks at West Duluth.

The Office Seeker.

The professional office seeker in this country, says the Western Rural, is a pitiable spectacle, and a nuisance of large dimensions. The man who is elected to office by the people is frequently no better by nature or habits than the man who pesters him almost to death for an appointment. But he is regarded a notch above the common herd who must get into official position by appointment, if they get in at all. The detestable practice of cleaning out the public service, when a new party is elevated to power, wholly regardless of the competency of the man who is turned out and often regardless of the competency of the man who is put in, is the direct cause of much disgusting office seeking demonstration. The practice is a common one, from the national government down to the town government. Hence there is an immense army of professional office seekers. What a self-respecting, industrious, competent man should want an office from which he is liable to be thrown at almost any moment, is something we never could understand; and the mystery is greater, too, when we understand that the pay for official service in many of the offices is not great. Yet there are some apparently decent men who are always after office. The vast majority of the small office hunting crowd, however, is anything but decent. They are pot-house politicians, bums, blacklegs, tax-eaters in the worst sense of the term, and are people that the community could easily spare and lose none of its respectability. Yet these are the fellows that usually get the offices. It is a stubborn, humiliating fact that a man would not for a moment think of admitting to his parlor one-half the people who hold office in this country. Whether or not it will ever be different we hardly know. We feel very sure that it never will be until the farmers assert their power in some organized way.

Maine Farmer: To be successful a farmer must have an income. It is not enough to produce what is wanted for consumption in the family, though this is a help as far as it goes. There is above this, however, a call for money that must be heeded. To meet this call the plan should be to have something to sell at all times of the year. Poultry, eggs, beef, veal, fruit, vegetables, early and late, each in its own way, though small in the single item, yet in the aggregate may be made to substantially swell the income and aid in meeting necessary expenses. Every time the farmer goes to town something is wanted, and by proper attention something can be taken to market to meet the draft. It will never do to ignore small things. It may be difficult to cipher out that these small matters pay day wages and a profit in their production, yet the farmer is better off for having them to sell. The fact is the labor and care called for in their production is supplied in snatches of time hardly missed from other duties and which otherwise might not be employed at wages. Thus it is that the farmer can make all of his time count. Attention to small things, and always something to sell will contribute much to a farmer's success.

Bran and Oat Meal.

N. J. S. in Prairie Farmer.

It is only in exceptional cases that the farmer can afford to purchase feed for stock. Nearly or quite all the food necessary to keep and fatten the stock for market should be raised upon the farm. But oil meal and bran can, in nearly all cases, be purchased and fed to stock with profit, and there are few materials that will add as much to the value of other materials, or will increase the value of the manure to the extent that this will.

It is not altogether in their value themselves as it is in the increased value they give to other materials in making up what we may term complete rations that they can be used with profit.

In order to feed stock during growth as economically as possible, it is an item to lessen the amount of grain fed. Not that stock can be properly prepared for market with no grain, but by using bran and oil meal in connection with other materials, the amount of grain can be materially decreased.

One of the strongest reasons for its use, especially during the winter, when stock must depend almost entirely upon dry food, such as straw, hay, sheaf or unthreshed oats, and corn fodder, and with oil meal make up a ration that will supply all the elements of nutrition.

In most localities the better plan is to secure a supply in the fall sufficient to last the greater part of the winter. It should be stored in bins or boxes where it is reasonably certain to keep dry. If it can be kept perfectly dry it will keep in a good condition for feeding a long time, without deteriorating in quality, while it can be secured at a less cost at this time than later.

The best results can be secured if the feed is cut before mixing the bran, straw, unthreshed oats, hay and fodder, if run through a cutter, and then a small quantity of bran and oil meal is added, very little grain will be required to keep all the growing and breeding stock in a good condition, and especially so if a comfortable shelter is provided, in addition; and the cost will be considerably less than if the grain must be supplied.

When fattening stock, grain must be largely depended upon to finish for market. And with these two materials used in connection with dry, rough feed, the stock will require but a light feed of grain; and in a majority of cases the less grain fed the lower the cost.

Dairy Suggestions.

Western Rural.

Do not employ a slow milker. The milk should be drawn quickly. One man says that he does not want a milker who cannot make froth in the pail. Pretty good rule.

Treat the cow as if she were a lady, some one has said. If we will treat her as a gentleman should treat anything of which he is the master, we shall treat the cow properly.

The delivery of milk in air-tight bottles is becoming more and more common. If the public wants it that way, give it to them, though there is, we believe, more merit attached to it than the method deserves.

The sooner we come to the conclusion that a good cow will pay well for every pound of grain that she can eat and simulate, and give it to her, the more money we shall get out of the cow. The most unprofitable place in the world for grain is in the bin.

We have just been reading an egotistical man's ridicule of a woman butter maker. Friend, the average woman is about a hundred degrees above a man as a natural butter maker. She has one mighty big advantage over a man—she doesn't chew tobacco or smoke a pipe.

Going to try the winter dairy for the first time this winter, perhaps. Well, you may likely run into several obstacles, but be patient and wait until you become accustomed to it, before getting out of patience. The calf will be more trouble, of course, but all in all, we believe you will find it more satisfactory in the end.

When people learn a thing or two about living, for instance that the best meats and butter are the cheapest—and they will learn it after awhile—meats and butter of poor quality will find no sale, and prices for superior products will be much better.

A small cow, with the right kind of machinery in her, writes a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, can get all the milk solids out of a given amount of feed as well as a big cow. But if you have good, big cows and they give you a fair profit, keep them, but breed them to the smallest dairy bull you can find, and if the result is a more concentrated cow, I think you are the gainer.

If the cows have been milked for several months, especially if rich milkers, at least one quart of hot water should be poured into each can of milk, says a lady. It lessens the viscosity of the milk serum, that is, thins the albumen, causes the cream to separate and rise more readily from the milk, and causes a more perfect separation of the butter from the buttermilk. The milk should set twenty-four hours if the water is forty-five to fifty-eight degrees; if ice is used ten to twelve hours is sufficient.

W. J. Nickles was up from Beltrami on Tuesday. A letter was mailed to him at Willowater, on Oct. 25th in relation to a school there and reached him on Nov. 2d. The delay he says was occasioned by the railroad war at the crossing and may occasion the loss of a situation.

HACK & GALLASBH.

The Pioneer Press was issued from its new twelve story home on Thursday October 31st. It consisted of only 40 pages, making the largest paper ever published in the State, if not in the United States. It now appears in a new dress as well as from a new home. The Pioneer Press is the leading daily of the Northwest, a living illustration of what a live paper can accomplish, but we sigh as we gaze upon its vastness and wish it was more of a paper for the common people.

Among our welcome visitors since last issue was Mr. D. T. Herriot, of Edna, who put up the wherewithal to carry THE JOURNAL along another notch. Such visits are becoming more numerous, but not too numerous. We have a few names on our list whose account has run for several years, and we should like to see all such and talk over matters. We suppose we are a good deal like other human beings—NEEDING all that is due us, but in cases where payment is absolutely impossible to be made this fall we should like some kind of assurances for the future.

HACK & GALLASCH.

John H. Johnson was in from Mentor last week and dropped in to square himself on THE JOURNAL subscription book. Mr. Johnson says that farmers are all living in hope for better crops next year though some are plowing their lands not knowing from whence the seed will come wherewith to sow it next spring. Some are turning their attention to stock and are trying to secure cows of some reliable dairy breed. This is a move in the right direction as the price this fall is low and the rate at which cattle are being slaughtered must tend to make the business profitable in the near future.

Rariton Chinchilla over coats $3.50 at the C. O. D. Clothing House.

Mr. Aaron Cooke is an innocent victim of the railroad crossing war. On Thursday last, while the D., C. & N. folks were trying to make the crossing he, with others, was standing on a flat car when they were ordered to "git out of that, right lively!" Forgetting for the time his 78 years, Mr. C. jumped to the ground with the other boys and severely sprained his right knee crippling him at once. Several of the bystanders picked him up and sat him down on a piece of bridge timber near a fire and Mr. Roberts went to get a buggy to take the old gentleman to his residence which is on 9, the same section the fight was on. While he sat awaiting the arrival of the buggy a large, well-dressed man came along and stood for awhile gazing at him. Being very near the fire and uncomfortably warm the old man asked the strong stranger to help him to move further from the fire but the human hog simply grunted and left the suffering old man to roast or move himself away as best he could. He was taken home shortly and has been unable to leave his bed since. It is hoped that his injury may not prove serious.

Don't Miss It

Hack & Gallasch closing out sale will benefit all cash buyers as they are selling out to get out of business and mean what they say.

Hon. Geo. R. Roberts was in the city on Saturday and gave THE JOURNAL a pleasant call. Mr. Roberts is of the opinion that there is something radically wrong in the methods of handling grain in the Red River Valley whereby the producer gets left every time while others make whatever profits there is in wheat. He says there are a few cases of suffering in Marshall County, cases requiring state help and that Gov. Merriam has responded promptly to the call for aid. He thinks that farmers should unite to secure their rights, as the only way whereby they can obtain them. He coincides with Donnelly's views on this subject as set forth in the speech which we present our readers this week. He does not think that farmers must necessarily form a political alliance but that their efforts should have a political significance a political effect whenever necessary. He heartily endorses the action of the new state of North Dakota in electing a farmer governor and thinks Minnesota should follow suit as the farming interests at present are more in need of a fostering care than any other, and no one is so well fitted to understand their needs and attend to them as is a practical farmer. As to the future of this country he thinks it will be just as we make it. We have the best soil on earth and everything needed to make a prosperous and happy country if we will, by attention to our business unite to make it so, but if we continue to neglect every business interest and simply drift with the tide it will be a miracle if the farmers, at least, ever are prosperous. He thinks the lessons of the past will prove of lasting benefit to this country only as they are applied and made use of. If it shall be the means of forcing farmers to unite in their own defense they will be valuable and worth all they have cost.

Thanksgiving Day.

The president has designated Thursday Nov. 28th as the National Thanksgiving Day. We can all eat our turkey with thankful hearts if we compare our condition with that of others. As to the condition of affairs in the valley we find the balance in our favor when we sum up the devastations by floods, by disease and by shortage in crops in other places. To make a personal application, no matter how desperate our case may seem we shall find others more destitute suffering greater ills if we look for them. We have a soil of the very richest quality in one of the most healthy climates on the globe—blessings which many of the sons of Adam have not but would give much to obtain. We have a country, possessing all of the blessings of civilization enjoyed by any, where our fertile soil will each year increase in value as settlements grow, sufficient to enrich every land owner in the valley even though he could make but a bare living for the intervening years. A soil whose capacity has as yet never been thoroughly tested capable of far greater results than have ever yet been realized. That we have many of the trials and privations incident to a new country is true but compared with those of the earliest settlers of the continent the greatest sink into insignificence, and these are but few that cannot be surmounted if met in the proper spirit. Yes, when we come to think of it our blessings are largely in the majority and we have very much to be thankful for. Please pass the turkey.

Ole Bang was up from the west side last week.

The Sheriff business was good last week. The Sheriff and a dozen deputies were busy all the week on the railroad war.

Have you seen Mrs. E. E. Bangs' cosy millinery parlors? It is worth the while to go just to see how nicely she has everything arranged, as well as what nice goods she has to arrange.

I. U. Jennings took a trip to Erskine on Saturday's train, missed his connection on his return trip and had to await Tuesday's train. We had an estray notice all fixed up, but his return spoiled it.

Hon. S. T. Comstock, of Minneapolis, paid our city his first visit on Saturday last. He was very favorably impressed with all he saw of the city. Mr. C. is a brother to our Congressman Comstock.

Miss Bailey returned to her home in the Fifth ward on Friday morning from a two months visit to Minneapolis where she has been perfecting herself in the mysteries of dressmaking in all the latest styles of the art.

S. W. Teal was over from the west side on Saturday to pay up on THE JOURNAL one year ahead. S. W. knows how to cheer the heart of the hard-working printer with the substantial evidence of appreciation that counts, and he is one of the fortunate ones able to do it this year.

The Great West says: "We didn't know we had any Railway and Warehouse Commissioners!" Guess if the doctor was trying to raise wheat at 60 cents per bushel for the best and NO BEST allowed, he wouldthink there was SOMETHING of the sort when he came to pay his taxes for their support, though he might well wonder what their duties are when he sees some miller sell the product of his 60 cent per bushel wheat for $1.20 cents.

A poor cow is dear at any price while a good one will not begin to bring what she is actually worth in these days. Whether a cow will pay or not depends upon herself and her owner wholly. She must be adapted to the milk habit and then she must have a sufficient quantity of the proper food. We have a few cows and heifers from one of the best milk and butter herds in the state which will be sold at scrub prices if taken soon, as we are obliged to reduce our herd for winter. Such opportunities are rare.

THE DULUTH CROOKSTON AND NORTHERN

Fails to Have Its Line Completed To and Into the City of Crookston On Or Before November 1st, 1889.

Therefore the Bonds are Null and Void. But the Manitoba Should Put Up.

Since our last issue the fate of the bonds has been decided by the failure of the D., C. & N. R. R. to comply with the conditions owing to circumstances beyond their control. Upon reaching the point of crossing on Friday afternoon, they were met by a Manitoba train backed up by an injunction. Instead of trying to force a crossing they quietly went to work to put material across the M. & M. line and went on with tracklaying, which was completed to the Robert street bridge by Tuesday night. Everything went off comparatively smoothly until Thursday afternoon, when a determined effort was made to force a crossing, but in vain, the other fellows having the ground too well occupied and fortified. The fact that the road would doubtless have been completed to and into the city by November 1st only for the action of the Manitoba road, would seem to give the D. C., & N. folks just cause to recover from that road for all damages incurred, including the $50,000. At the present writing the crossing has not been made, but the work of ballasting the road is progressing lively, and the depot is being built.

Donnelly's Address.

With this issue we present our readers with an address by the Hon. Ignatius Donnelly, which address furnishes abundant food for thought. It has been said of Mr. Donnelly that he is a demagogue of the first water, changing with every wind that blows if it blows fair for Donnelly, but be that as it may, the fact remains that there is very much solid, sound truth in this address of his, and there is no reason why farmers may not accept all that is sound and good, rejecting the chaff or husks. Mr. Donnelly sets forth in clear and plain language the aims of the Farmers' Alliance, and urges upon farmers the importance of joining, and the farmer who hesitates to accept the truths he utters for fear that Mr. Donnelly has aspired to some office in the past, or may in the future, is too thin-skinned to need salvation; too shallow to appreciate the depths of degradation to which some are trying to force the business of farming. Whatever Mr. Donnelly may have been or may hope to be, matters not; his address to the farmers is full of earnest truth and well worthy of serious consideration by every farmer. Read it carefully, then act according as your judgment dictates.

Do not forget the cheap excursion via the Manitoba railway to points in Canada, west of and including Montreal. Plan now for a delightful journey back to the scenes of early days. Apply to C. H. Mix, agent of the Manitoba Railway, at Crookston, Minn., or write to F. I. Whitney, Gen. Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

We Go Out.

To get out of business and our prices tell the story. Come while the assortment is complete.

HACK & GALLASCH.

The Great West is a new acquisition to our table. It is the new Farmers' Alliance paper with the name of Dr. E. W. Fish at the masthead. We have never met the Dr. personally, but judging from his writings we should very much like to grasp his hand, as we recognize in him a co-laborer in the cause of justice to the farmer. Agriculture is the basis of the prosperity of this great commonwealth, and he who thinks the farmer has an equal show with other business men is either blind or a fool. The Great West has enlisted for the fight that must come before the business of farming is elevated to its proper place, and should be in the hands of every farmer in the State, and THE JOURNAL will do all in its power to place it in the hands of its readers. We have the Great West on file and will take pleasure in showing it to our farmer friends when they call.

John Knuppe is in the city this week.

The firemen's ball was well attended and a grand success.

Don't forget "Out of Bondage," on Monday evening, Nov. 11th.

Mr. A. Sture returned from Sweden with his bride on Friday morning.

J. E. Kernan and M. C. Malone are buying wheat at Marin's station, on the D., C. & N. R. R. Mr. K. reports that they have taken in wheat at the rate of three carloads a day ever since the road reached that point.

On Saturday night an individual under the influence of tanglefoot broke in the front door of M. B. Hayes' residence and raised hob generally. He was taken before Judge Lewis on Monday morning and fined $5 and costs.

Farmers

and large consumers go to Hack & Gallasch for everything they have at wholesale prices and no humbug.

Sunday and Monday afforded a slight foretaste of winter, but the weather prophets all say we are to have an extremely mild winter. Even the Indians, according to the Brainerd Dispatch, predict a milder winter than last year based upon the methods the muskrats have adopted in building their winter residence.

C. M. Ohls and wife returned to Beltrami on Friday morning of last week to make their future home there. In the fall of '88 Mr. Ohls disposed of his interests in Polk County and went to Chicago to live. After a year's experience in that dull village he returns satisfied that there is no place like home, after all. Mr. O. attended the Knights' re-union at Washington and pronounces it a huge affair.

MONY TO LOAN.

I. U. Jennings is prepared to loan money on city and farm property.
[18-tf]

Dennis Keiley was down from Sletton last week and selected five choice Holstein-Friesian heifers from our herd to add to his dairy. Mr. K. is one of the farmers upon whom the conviction is forced that until farmers can secure their just proportion of profits wheat-raising is a failure and he proposes to try a change. He has a flock of over 100 sheep and will try a herd of dairy cows to see what wool and butter will do. By this method he will secure a good market for all his coarser grains something that farmers do not have as a rule, a market that he does not have to pay an exhorbitant freight rate to reach. He reasons thusly on his dairy cows: "The average cow of the country produces from one-quarter to one-half pound of butter per day; a cow that will do better than one-half being a rare exception, while a dairy bred cow, say the Holstein for instance, can be made to produce from two to three pounds per day on the same feed and care necessary to make the scrub hold out her one-half pound during the season. If I take the average butter market the year round and make my cow produce only two pounds per day day I am then beating the average butter record of the country four times over with a possibility of doing even better than that. Will it pay? Some of my neighbors tell me that their quarter and half pound cows beat wheat all hollow and say they don't know what they should have done for groceries had it not been for their cows. If this is true and I have every reason to believe it is, is there not money in good dairy cows? Is there not a sufficient incentive for improving the dairy herd? And I believe further that at a time like this when everybody is going out or wants to is the very time to go in for this very depression must cause a reaction in the near future, a reaction largely in favor of the men who have quietly taken in all of the dairy cows they can get hold of. The present state of things will create a better future market for both butter and beef, but I must confess that I can see no such encouraging signs for wheat just as long as the price is so absolutely in the control of the man who handles it, and I believe that day will never come until we can sell our wheat on an entirely open and free market regardless of grades. No sir, I am done with wheat for a while at least. Shall try cows and sheep and I'll bet I'll win."

Out of Bondage.

Grand Forks Plaindealer: A large and very enthusiastic audience were present at Gotzian's hall last evening to witness the presentation of "Out of Bondage," by the Hyers Sisters and their company of colored artists. "Out of Bondage" can hardly be called a play. It is simply a series of songs and comedy business and given by a mediocre company would amount to nothin, but in the hands of the Hyers Sisters combination makes a very pleasing entertainment. Miss Madah Hyers has a remarkably good soprano voice and the other members of the company are far above the average.

A prominent, hardworking sober and industrious farmer said to THE JOURNAL man last Saturday: "I just brought four nice hogs to this market and all I could get offered for them was four cents dressed. My neighbor took his to another market and got five. It looks to me as though you people of Crookston were standing in your own light when such a state of things exist, as it is for your interest to encourage trade all you can!" That it is for the interest of our people to foster trade and build up a good market for farmers is wholly true but that the city is indifferent, does not try to do so is not wholly true. If our friend will notice our council proceedings he will see that the city has taken action in relation to the pork packing institution calculated to build up said institution and we have strong hopes to see that business revived. Human nature is human nature the world over and no man will pay more for a thing than he is obliged to, howbeit the consumer of that pork no doubt will pay as much for it as he would had the farmer received a satisfactory price. The situation, however furnishes food for thought and is one in which every public spirited citizen of Crookston should take an active interest to the end that as good a market at least as neighboring cities furnish should be maintained here.

Beltrami Briefs.

Yours truly, OCCASIONAL.

C. L. Hanson was up from Garden on Wednesday and made THE JOURNAL man happy by a renewal a year in advance. Good boy.

Hon. H. Steenerson fell on the sidewalk near the central school building on Tuesday morning, suffering a fracture of his right leg near the ankle. He is said to be getting along as nicely as possible.

Ole P. Renne came up from Garden on Tuesday, and on Wednesday went out to THE JOURNAL stock farm and bought the last one of those spring calves that we offered for sale last week. He got a good one.

For Sale.

One half section of choice land, four miles from city, 175 acres under cultivation, 30 acres in pasture, two flowing wells, good farm buildings. First crop will pay purchase money. If you are after a snap call on D. E. Hatlestad or at THE JOURNAL office. [23-tf]

"Give That Calf More Rope."

When you hear men like the Pillsburys, who have made immense fortunes in handling and grinding wheat, and who have just sold their mills at a figure way up in the millions, advising the farmer who for years and years furnished the basis of that wealth, to "diversify his husbandry," it looks to us like the height of sarcasm and suggests the head to this article in reply. They tell the farmers that the reason why wheat-raising don't pay is because we raise too much wheat and don't raise hogs enough, while the fact is that immense fortunes are made in wheat every year and valuable milling properties are built up—looks like if the farmers don't "raise hogs enough," he fattens a great many, for all who touch wheat after it leaves the farmers' hands make money out of it. If the Pillsburys and all such, after having ground wheat for years and years were unable to pay their hired help, and found their mills were not worth one-half what they cost, their advice to farmers to diversify would not seem such a hollow mockery as it does now, when the farmers, toiling though they do from morning till night, find themselves unable to pay their help and running expenses, and find their farms not worth half what they cost them, all the time knowing that there is big money in wheat for somebody. When such a state of things exists the times are fearfully out of joint, and this is the exact condition of things to-day. The Pillsburys and such will tell you that for a few years there "has been no money in wheat!" If that is true, how comes it that they have made overgrown fortunes and that their mills are so valuable? Where does the money come from to divide among the mill hands on the "profit plan?" Why do they tell you farmers to "diversify your husbandry" in order to make a bare living, while there is millions in your wheat? Because they know that raising live stock, which they do not want, will enable you to keep on raising wheat, which they do want, and they are becoming alarmed lest the farmers get weary, or entirely busted raising wheat, in which event their profits would be cut off. What has brought about this state of things, where the wheat-grower gets the bare cost of producing the wheat, while those that toil not reap the rich reward? Well, if it is not combination against the grower we do not know what it is, and we believe that this state of things will continue until the farmer is forced to unite in the grange or the Alliance or whatever you choose to call it, to protect his own interests against the encroachments of other interests. When he does that he will by being able to protect his own business interests, stand upon a level with other business men—a state of things which does not exist to-day. Then he can "diversify" or not as he likes without regard to those who are now fattening upon his toil.

Does it Pay?

This question has been asked in relation to the Board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners more frequently this fall than ever before; it is a pertinent one, and to us seems to be somewhat of an open question depending wholly upon circumstances. We believe the object of its creation is all right and if the creation of the Board is not made a stepping stone to political ambition without regard to the interests of the farmer, and if the Board is created of the best men for the place wholly with a view to affording the relief sought then it is all right and worth its cost. A few years ago the fact that the wheat-raiser did not get a fair deal in the handling of his wheat was forced upon the farmer, and the result was the creation of this Board for the purpose of obtaining the relief sought. It has been sustained at great cost and in some instances has been of benefit, but in the main point of vital interest has it accomplished all that it could? Is the present system of grading wheat, the work of the Board, of sufficient value to the farmer to pay him? When you see the miller receive just as much compensation for his labor of grinding the wheat as the farmer does for producing it one is forced to the conclusion that SOMETHING is wrong—the system or something else. The farmer has an idea that the Board he has created and is supporting at great expense is the proper person to find the relief and apply it. If the farmer has to suggest the remedy and apply it himself what is the use for an expensive Board? Are not the Inspectors paying more attention to the technicalities of wheat inspection than they are to the crying needs of the situation? Do they not give more time and thought to the GRADE of the wheat than to the QUALITY of flour it will make and what THE PRODUCER OUGHT TO GET FOR IT? How is it that there is no No. 1 Hard wheat in the Red River Valley and yet there is just as much "Pillsbury's Best" and other leading brands of flour as usual? One farmer tells us that he sent his wheat to market himself, sold it on sample for 60 CENTS PER BUSHEL!—No grade wheat, in this market; was offered only 30 cents for it. Under the state system the wheat would have been "no grade" wheat all the same and the farmer, if he sold by grade would have had to accept the 30 cents—but his taxes for the support of the magnificent system would have been just as great as though the Board had provided for him a way by which he could get 60 cents for his "no grade" wheat. In this case the farmer pays his agents (the Board) for doing his work for him and then goes on and does it himself. Had he left the matter with them he would have been the loser by one-half his crop. We have to confess that we fail to see where the farmer gets value received out of the complicated machinery of state inspection which costs him a good round sum to support. If the Board was created for anything it was to protect the interests of the wheat-raiser, but if any man will be kind enough to inform us where the farmer is protected in the deal we will gladly give him space for the valuable information.

A PREDICTION

Of a Warm Winter Based on Something More Reliable Than Muskrats.

Moorhead News.

A popular subject just now is the weather, and more particularly predicting what the coming winter will be, whether warm or cold. The innocent and harmless muskrat of Assinnaboine has been consulted on the subject and has given it out cold, according to the testimony of those who assume to have correspondence with that festive rodent, that the winter will be a frigid one, and that is the reason he is now industriously engaged in building nine story houses, so as to get as near the sun as possible. The goose bone of New England has also been consulted and it corroborates the testimony of the muskrat in a most remarkable manner. Other prophets presumably of a higher order than those we have named, inasmuch as they belong to the human race instead of the lower animal kingdom, have sent out their warning to the people and urged upon them the necessity of making preparation for the extreme rigors of an arctic winter. Many people take stock in muskrats and goose bones and weather cranks, and we think we are apt to rely upon their prophecies with too much credulity. If they would stop to consider the subject from a common sense stand point, they would see that these predictions are merely the devices of coal and wood dealers, and are advertised in the interest of their business. The News has consulted what is considered more reliable sources of information relating to the meteorology of this portion of Minnesota, and has discovered, with the assistance of Sergeant S. L. Dosher, observer in charge of the United States weather bureau, at Moorhead, a most remarkable coincidence as to the mildness or severity of the winters of northern Minnesota, and which robs the predictions of muskrat, goose bone and weather crank, of their value, and in fact renders them wholly unreliable and vain. By the coincidence and discovery the News is able to make the prediction that the coming winter will be a warm one. It will be about the same in temperature as last winter. We do not predict at this time upon the precipitation or snow fall, but only on the temperature. At another time possibly we shall take up the snow fall branch of the subject. Now, our readers will desire to know how we are enabled to make this prediction of a warm winter with so much confidence, and we acknowledge fully their right to be informed and will give it to them.

The Moorhead weather bureau was established January 1, 1881, and upon a careful examination of the record of temperature from that date to the present time we find that warm winters and cold winters have invariably come in pairs. The record is as follows: Winter of 1880-81 (the data for November and December 1880 having been taken from the record kept at Breckenridge) average temperature for 5 months from Nov. 1 to April 1 was 16.4 degrees above zero, and for the following winter of 1881-82, it was 16.4 degrees above, or precisely the same as the year preceding. Here are two warm winters. For the winter of 1882-83 the average temperature was 7.9 degrees above; and for 1883-84 it was 7.4 degrees above. Here are two cold winters. For 1884-85 it was 11.2 degrees above, and 1885-86 it was 13.5 above. Here are two warm winters or at least considerably warmer than the cold ones preceding. For 1886-87 the average temperature was 6-5 degrees above, and for 1887-88 it was 8 degrees above. Here you are again with a pair of cold winters. For 1888-89 was 16.7 degrees above, or a remarkably warm winter, as everybody who lived here at that time distinctly and agreeably remembers. So we have experienced the first half of the last warm winter period. The second half is before us.

Raising Buckwheat.

Glyndon News: Jerome Daniels is one of the few who have succeeded with a buckwheat crop this year. Did not get a large yield, but it ripened and produced 15 bushels per acre. He has had it ground into fine flour at the Glyndon mills, and besides enough to make pancakes for his family all winter he has considerable to sell to his neighbors at a good price. He sowed early (May 20th) and believes in that practice; the old practice in York state of seeding 4th of July will not do for this country. Try buckwheat.

PRINTERS' INK,

A JOURNAL FOR ADVERTISERS.

Printers' Ink is just what it purports to be, "a journal for advertisers." It is issued on the first and fifteenth of each month, and is the representative journal—the trade journal, so to speak—of American advertisers. It tells the intending and inexperienced advertiser in plain, comprehensive articles how, when and where to advertise; how to write an advertisement; how to display one; what newspapers or other media to use; how much to expend—in fact, discourses on every point that admits of profitable discussion. If you advertise at all, Printers' Ink can help you. Perhaps you expend but ten dollars a year in advertising; if so Printers' Ink may show you how to obtain double the service you are now getting for one-half the money. A year's subscription costs but one dollar; a sample copy costs but five cents. Advertising is an art practiced by many but understood by few. The conductors of Printers' Ink understand it thoroughly. Surely their advice, based on an experience of more than twenty-five years, will help you. Address Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce St., New York.

The Hog and the Hen.

Tennessee Farmer.

In behalf of the neglected and unappreciated hen we rise up. Knocked about from pillar to post, "shewed" off the steps, kicked from the hay-loft and thrown from the feed-trough, she is the most abused and mistreated factor of wealth in all our fair land.

What voice has she? Who is her spokesman? Who cares for her, the poor, despised, but faithful hen.

Compare her with the hog. The hog that wallows and roots in all his glory. The hog that is the speculator's pool. The hog that is "cornered" by the "Bulls" and "Bears," that sells on "puts" and "calls," that goes "short" and "long." The great hog, with which, indeed, we may gamble to our heart's content from the four points of the compass.

From all parts of the country come reports of the condition of the hog. There is much solicitude about him. He furnishes us meat that is often mass fed, and lard that is openly adulterated. When we are in health and vigor we may eat his meat and stomach his grease, but when the system is worn out and weak, we turn from him in disgust. The thought of him makes us sick. Our digestive organs cannot handle him.

Where do we then turn to recuperate our weakened vitality and to regain our strength and vigor? What is considered wholesome and recommended to us then? Why, chicken soup and soft boiled eggs,

The hen. The hen and her products come to our rescue.

That which agrees with us in sickness cannot well disagree with us in health.

Why not, then, appreciate the hen and exalt her as she should be? Give her only half attention even, and in a few years she will so out-distance the hog that she cannot hear him squeal.

Manderson and Pensions.

Moorhead News.

United States Senator Charles P. Manderson of Nebraska, who was a gallant soldier in the war of the rebellion and received serious wounds, and whose pension was rerated and increased by Commissioner Tanner without an application from Mr. Manderson, and who has just returned the certificate of rerated pension to the secretary of the interior for cancellation, owing to the manner of its issurnce, which the secretary has decided was irregular, has written a letter to Secretary Noble in relation to the matter in which he says he never intended to retain what might be due under the certificate for his own use, but he has kept silent under the gross abuse which has been heaped upon him because he could not find it in his heart "by precipitation of action to reflect upon a gallant comrade, who certainly supposed that within the requirements of the law he was doing a kindly and proper act." In an interview Senator Manderson is reported as having spoken as follows: "The government practically told the men who enlisted, 'You risk your lives for the stability of the government. If you come out well and safe there is no liability on our part; but if you receive injuries, then, as far as possible, we will make you a reparation.' Now, that reparation can be practically made in but one way, and that is by giving money reparation; which, from the magnitude of the aggregate number of contracts, must be limited. If it were said that the indigent only should receive this reparation, then a slur would be cast upon every pensioner of the government, and, as a matter of justice, the reward should be sufficient for his support. But that is not the case. The pensioners of the government are not paupers, and indigence is not and should not be a necessary qualification of the pensioner, and the idea that seemed to be current to the effect is far from correct." This is undoubtedly the correct view. Pensions are not given because the beneficiary is poor, but as a reward for faithful service and a help towards repairing the reduced capacity of a disabled man to make his living. Money is not alone made by muscle. Brains constitute a potent power in money making, and though a man may have lost a member or have been otherwise injured in his body so as to disable him from sawing wood or shoveling dirt, if his head was spared his brains are as good as another man's whose body is sound, and a man with a maimed body carry a sound head, is not debarred from using his brains in the affairs of life. If he should succeed in the business he undertakes, shall the government which he served in time of danger and need, single him out for its condemnotion and tell him that he is no longer worthy of the reward which he gallantly won? The logic of this would be to discourage effort. It would put a bounty upon idleness and sloth. No. There can be no partiality. If a man served, was wounded or contracted disease in the line of duty, he is entitled to and should be paid his pension, though he has become a millionaire since the war. He need not necessarily use it on himself, but it is his right to say what he shall do with it.

Undue Haste in Fattening.

The Prairie Farmer.

Make hast slowly is a good rule to apply generally. Animals that have been summered on grass will not bear, profitably, to be pushed on grain-feed during the fall, as haste in this direction disturbs digestion. Under the action of the laws of nature things are, many times, made to afford rest to follow any undue exertion of a given part, or of the whole body. Under this law, the appetite is taken away when over-feeding has been practised, that compensation, through rest of the digestive organs, may occur. Disgust of food always follows over-feeding; yet it is theorizing falsely to say that if the beast gets too much food, it will reduce the amount taken, voluntarily, when surfeited, because deranged digestion follows at once upon excessive feeding, and then what follows? Nothing less than an interruption of nutrition, the body shrinking. This shrinkage can only come from disordered action—a disease in itself. This must be recovered from before nutrition can be resumed, and during this time we suffer a double loss, namely, through the shrinkage, in the first place, and through delay from deranged digestion, in the second place.

There is still another reason why damage may follow indiscreet feeding. Fermentation from indigestion may, to a greater extent than we are aware of, damage the meat of the fattening beast. This damage may happen to its keeping qualities as well as to its flavor. Nothing can be more reasonable than that it should happen to both. It is a popular and doubtless a well founded belief that the flavor of the growing animal's flesh is modified by the food that goes in at the mouth. We know this to follow the feeding of oil cake to the fattening steer. Certain articles of food, notably milk and butter, are tainted by near approach to certain vegetables, as well as by being in proximity to decaying or noxious substances of any kind.

The absence of tests is this direction may rightfully be termed an oversight, for the perfection of meats has not yet been fully accomplished—is in fact one of the things least discriminated upon, and receives less attention than is given to any other kind of food in use. Therefore, we deduce from the hints given, that the fall feeding should be commenced with care and moderation; the limit always being inside of the possibilities of the digestive powers of the fattening beasts. Dainty rations at first, carefully added to as the powers of digestion are developed by use. G. S.

While he is mean enough to breath through his nose through fear of wearing out his teeth, and may be a bad man to tackle, we are here to bet him a V that he pays every cent of his account with us.

Home for Thanksgiving.

For many years distinctively a Yankee festival, "Thanksgiving Day" has won its way to the hearts of the American people, until now its observance is annually recommended to the nation by the President of the United States. It is a national holiday—and something more. It is not a Fourth of July, not Christmas, not New Years, not simply a feast day, not merely a "Harvest Home," but the charm of a genuine Thanksgiving is in the home-gathering of all the family under the parental roof. From the plains of Texas, the gulches of California, the prairies of Dakota, and the mining camps and ranches of Montana, the children—children still—come flying home by steam to greet again the gray-haired father and mother. Are you going back to the old home this Thanksgiving? If you are anywhere in the northwest, your route home, from Minneapolis and St. Paul to the east should be by "The Burlington." For time tables, maps, and any information, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

The Real Cause.

The Western Rural.

The railroad monopoly is "dead set" against the Inter-State commerce law, a very harmless thing, by-the-way, compared to the dose of legislation which the roads must yet swallow. The principal feature of the law which bothers and irritates the roads is its interference with their chronic practice of doing just as they continental please, for while it is true that their profits are somewhat curtailed by the law, it is also true that the law has not and cannot in its imperfect condition, protect the public fully. The roads are just like an unruly boy who has had his way for years, but who finally comes under an authority which interferes with his will. That boy will chafe and squirm though, as a matter of fact, his rights, as he regards them, are not nearly as much interferred with as his pride. Even under the present law the roads would be making a satisfactory profit, if it were not for a few reasons entirely outside of the law. To begin with, there is not as much money being made in any legitimate business as there once was; in the next place, the management of railroad business has been exceedingly reckless under which needless roads have been built, often paralleling roads that were abundantly able to take care of all the business along their lines; and in the third place the management has been fraudulent. No swindle greater than the management of our railroads was ever perpetrated in this country. The watered stock which the roads carry is largely representative of absolute fraud, just as much of a fraud as was perpetrated by Fleming & Meriam of grain swindle notoriety. Here is a road that is practically bankrupt. Its managers issue huge blocks of watered stock which they sell to the public for good money and pocket it. That sort of proceedings is a swindle. Here is another road that is making much more than is needed to pay a splendid dividend upon its stock. Its managers issue a lot of watered stock, sell it and enrich themselves with the proceeds for two purposes: First to get other peoples money into their own coffers and second to provide stock to absorb the enormous profits that they are fleecing from the public. It is a fraud in conception and in every detail of execution. Then comes a prosperous, wealthy road that desires to make some improvement, the erection of a depot perhaps. The road has robbed the public of enouge to make its managers rich. It has earned enough to build a dozen depots without feeling the expense. But it issues watered stock to raise the money to make the contemplated improvement. Now that road has extorted perhaps millions of dollars from the people, and it is determined to keep possession of all its ill-gotten gains. This is a fraud. It then proposes to make an improvement with somebody else's money, and compel the public to pay interest on the forced loan. It is an infernal fraud.

Shiftlessness.

Western Rural: There has always been and perhaps always will be a class of unsettled people who never keep at any one thing long enough to make a success even when the business possesses conspicuous elements of success. Such people go from one thing to another, as the weather vane changes with the wind. Usually they are flopped about by the changing conditions of the market. Hogs this year may be low and cattle high, and they go out of hogs and go into cattle raising and generally there is enough of them to change to raise the price of hogs sooner or later and lower the price of cattle, and then they jump back again. As a rule it is best to stick to one thing. The ups and downs come to all lines of industry, but in the long run you can make as much money out of one as the other and it is best to stick. The rolling stone, you know, catches no moss, while on the other hand, constant dripping wears away the stone.

Why Sixty Seconds Make a Minute.

Mix Muller in Fortnightly Review.

Why is our hour divided into sixty minutes, each minute into sixty seconds, etc.? Simply and solely because in Babylon there existed, by the side of the decimal system of notation, another system, the sexagesimal, which counted by sixties. Why that number should have been chosen is clear enough, and it speaks well for the practical sense of those ancient Babylonian merchants. There is no number that has so many divisors as sixty. The Babylonians divided the sun's daily journey into twenty-four parasangs or 720 stadia. Each parasang or hour was divided into sixty minutes. A parasang is about a German mile, and Babylonian astronomers compared the progress made by the sun during one hour at the time of the equinox to the progress made by a good walker during the same time, both accomplishing one parasang. The whole course of the sun during the equinoctial hours was fixed at twenty-four parasangs, or 720 stadia, or 360 degrees. This system was handed on to the Greeks, and Hipparchus, the great Greek philosopher, who lived about 150 B. C., introduced the Babylonian hour into Europe. Ptolemy, who wrote about 140 A. D., and whose name still lives in that of the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, gave still wider currency to the Babylonian way of reckoning time. It was carried along on the quiet stream of traditional knowledge through the middle ages, and, strange to say, it sailed down safely over the Niagara of the French Revolution. For the French, when revolutionizing weights, measures, coins and dates, and subjecting all to the decimal system of reckoning, were induced by some unexplained motive to respect our clocks and watches, and allowed our dials to remain sexagesimal—that is, Babylonian, each hour consisting of sixty minutes. Here you see again the wonderful coherence of the world, and how what we call knowledge is the result of an unbroken tradition of a teaching descending from father to son. Not more than a hundred arms would reach from us to the builders of the palaces of Babylon, and enable us to shake hands with the founders of the oldest pyramids and to thank them for what they have done for us.

Farmers' Gatherings.

Western Rural.

There are some "farmers'" organizations with high sounding names in this country that are masquerading about in borrowed clothing. The meeting of one has been announced in the papers for several weeks, and we have been greatly interested in perusing the list of "farmers" who have been appointed delegates to the meeting. The governors of the different states appoint the delegates to this convention, and among those appointed from Illinois we observe the names of such horny-handed, sunburned-browed farmers as Samuel Allerton and Ira Coy. Mr. Allerton farms at the Union Stock Yards. He has more money than most farmers have, for farming at the Union Stock Yards is much more profitable than anywhere else on the habitable globe. Indeed most of the profits of agriculture materialize at these yards. The gentlemen who are engaged in agricultural pursuits at this point devote most of their energies to raising stock—on the books. They have reduced the business to a delightful science. The modus operandi is to let somebody else feed the cattle, while the farmers at the Stock Yards pocket the profits. Talk about farming not paying! Farmer Allerton makes it pay.

As to Mr. Coy, he raises Cain and if there was any saccharine matter in his product, he would burst the sugar trust in six months. But there is not much juice in his Cain. He is the lawyer for the Union Stock Yards company and what he produces is exceedingly dry but it is substantial. We suppose that he is selected as a delegate to this farmers' meeting because he is the hired man of the Stock Yards farmers. Mr. Coy is not ignorant of matters connected with agriculture. He is one of the few men who knows just where to put his hand upon the profits of the business, and that is a good deal more than most of the readers of The Western Rural know. When the profits become hidden from such farmers as Mr. Allerton, Mr. Coy throws Blackstone and Kant at the covering and splits it open, revealing the dollars to his employers. With such farmers in a farmers convention we have no doubt that the interests of agriculture will be well taken care of. If the governor of New York will appoint Mr. Real as a delegate we think there will be no room to question the agricultural character of the gathering.

This is a world of progress and dairymen have lots to learn, says a correspondent of Hoard's Dairyman. I have been taught to feed bran, and have now got in the habit of feeding it the year round to cows and calves. I feed out some two or three car loads a year. The summer bran is so cheap I have put in three carloads, over forty tons at eight dollars a ton, at my nearest depot. There is no feed like silage and bran to grow young cattle in the winter time considering the cost of it, and it is just as good for beef cattle.

Why Does Farming Not Pay?

Western Rural.

Much space is used in discussing this question. Not very long since a number of journals were endeavoring to solve the enigma. Well, it is not because farm products are not needed or not wanted. But it is because the commercial circles are banded together in little knots of brigands to rob the farmer. That is the answer to the question. Wall street, with the help of the Government of the United States, robs him of money. The financial brigand has been fleecing the producer for a quarter of a century. He has been making it harder to find money to do business with all the time. He has lighted the fires that have consumed the greenbacks; he has prompted the curtailment of the national bank circulation; he has refused to allow the free coinage of silver and refused to allow silver money to have a free untrammeled circulation, and he has locked up millions of dollars in the vaults of the public treasury, where the money can do no good, and while the people have been calling and begging for enough money to enable them to properly do business, the Government of the United States has sat like a bump on a log while the financial brigand has been getting in his work. Farming does not pay because there is no money in the country to make it pay. When Wall street gets pinched, and commercial circles get into a very tight place, the Secretary of the Treasury hauls out his cash bag and buys a lot of bonds, letting the dollars fall upon the gamblers of Wall street and the struggling merchants, like heaven's blessing upon the righteous. But it never turns its hand to help the struggling farmer. He is left to live or die, to sink or swim, to pay his debts or be closed out by the sheriff, as the wheel of unaided fortune may determine. Railroads can get help from the government. Wall street can obtain assistance, but the man who feeds all and clothes all, and gives whatever prosperity the nation enjoys, must shift for himself.

Why does farming not pay? Because the farmer is robbed right and left. If he has a dollar in his pocketbook somebody will steal half of it before he can turn round. If he has a bushel of grain to sell or a steer to market, somebody will steal the whole of it before he knows it, and the government permits it. Legislators permit it; Congressmen permit it; courts permit it. It would be astonishing if farming paid, under present conditions; and commerce and society must be turned upside down and inside out before farming will pay. But there is nobody to do that but farmers themselves. Congress and our State legislatures must be cleaned out as you would clean a dirty stable. The money bags and monopolist of the United States must give way to representatives of the people's interest, and mind you, reader, this is the only road out of your difficulties. It is either bold, persistent, united action on your part at the primaries and the ballot box, or it is utter bankruptcy and wretched ruin and poverty. As in the past the few mean to devour your substance. Under other governments the people have been helpless. The governments have been on the side and at the back of the plunderers, and the people did not feel that they could change the government. In this country the people are the government. They need not be devoured unless they choose to be. But the insatiable appetite of greed will take every one of us if we stand alone. If we come together and stand breast to breast and heart to heart for our own interests, there is no combination that can hold us.

Claus Spreckles and the Sugar Trust.

Western Rural.

More than a year ago, when the talk of a sugar trust was first announced, Claus Spreckles, an extensive sugar refiner of California and Philadelphia, came forward with an intimation that he would furnish sugar at a fair price, let the combination be what it might. We are reminded of this at the present time by the fact that Mr. Spreckles is figuring quite prominently before the public as a Goliah, to slay the giant Sugar Trust. During all this time this gentleman has been turning out refined sugar at his California factory at the rate of about a million pounds a day, and as we have heard of no low priced sugar being sold, the profits must have been magnificent. He has now put in operation a Philadelphia plant with a capacity of a million pounds a day, which he promises to increase to four millions, and will start one in New Orleans, so that his capacity will be six million pounds a day, three-fourths of the output of the trust which is eight million pounds per day. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Spreckles means what he says about using his great scheme as a means of reform against the wicked conspirators in control of the price of sugar. Mr. Spreckles has done nothing so far for the benefit of consumers and it is probable that nothing practical will be done unless the people do it themselves.

Walking vs. Cycling.

In The Chautauquan for July, Elizabeth Robins Pennell gives some practical hints on how to take an outing with a thin pocket-book. She recommends walking tours, cycling tours and canoeing as the cheapest and most independent modes of traveling, and having tried all, finds cycling the most satisfactory. She says: "I cannot honestly recommend walking, not only because of the difficulty about one's knapsack, but because of the great monotony in one's pace which often is not compensated by variety in the scenery. Walking in Switzerland or in any other mountainous country is a different matter. For half the time you are not walking at all, but scrambling and climbing and you get variety enough. In cycling, on the other hand, there is always the greatest exhileration and constant change in the exercise, while your knapsack is carried comfortably on the luggage carrier, and you are not tied to railroad or post-office. Indeed I often wonder why since the invention of cycles anyone should walk. I know it is often said that in cycling you must keep to the main road, upon which you are therefore dependent. But take my word for it the short cuts of the tramp are a myth. In the first place, unless you are as familiar with the country as with the streets of your own town, you do not know the short cuts and you cannot find them out from the natives who, in no matter what country, 'never know nothink'; and in the second place, the high road in the end is usually to be found the most direct, and when you are walking you are never eager to take an unnecessary step. For a cycling tour, exactly the same preparations are necessary as for a tramp. You must be in training, you must map out your route, which is now more easily managed, since on a machine you can go much farther than on foot, and in all but the most remote parts of the United States can be sure of a hotel or at least a bed at night. I insist upon a decent place to sleep in because I do not think independence consists in roughing it. On the contrary, in roughing it you often lose your independence quite as much as in the most conventional ways of traveling."

If Not Why Not?

Have you given Attix & Co., a trial order for groceries? If not try one and see what they can do for you. If you want anything in the line of Dry Goods, Yankee Notions or Groceries, call on Attix & Co., the Fifth ward merchants. [18-tf.]

The Pioneer Press reception is said to have been a grand affair over 50,000 persons visiting the building during the day and evening. Over 9,000 invitations were issued to people outside of St. Paul and Minneapolis to whom a "come everybody" invitation was extended. The show for one day beat the Minneapolis exposition all hollow the animals all being on exhibition and the machinery all running. The Pioneer Press is a great paper; made so by the liberal patronage of a generous public. What a great pity it is not more in sympathy with the masses—more of a paper for the people.

A meeting will be held at McIntosh next Saturday to consider the project of putting up a Farmers' Warehouse. A prominent farmer from near there told the writer, last Saturday, that buyers make a difference of from 15 to 20 cents per bushel between rejected and No. 3 wheat. By the reports in the Pioneer Press of sales by samples we see that rejected sells for just as much on an average as No. 3, which makes a very fine thing for somebody—but it is not the producer by any means. The farmers begin to realize that something must be done to protect their rights, and when they do become thoroughly aroused and go to work in earnest something will be done, and that right speedily. The history of the past few years shows that fortunes have been made in wheat, but the producer has not made them—in fact he has not had his fair share of the profits. While the Pillsburys, for simply handling and grinding wheat have built up overgrown fortunes, and at last sold their mills for a vast sum, the producer, who toiled early and late, year in and year out, incurring all of the expense of raising the wheat, have been impoverished each year, and should they desire to sell their farms, would be obliged to do so in many instances at a figure that would not pay the cost of improvements. This is wrong, all wrong, and must be changed if this country is ever brought to that stage of prosperity that it is susceptible of. Agriculture, being the basis of its wealth, must be fostered and protected or all business interests must suffer. There must be some plan devised by which the producer will become a sharer in the vast fortunes that are yearly made in wheat, and it is a problem in the solution of which the business man of this country is equally interested with the producer. The Supreme Court has just decided that the sugar trust is illegal, being a combination against the rights of others. How much better is the present system of handling our wheat? Is it not a conspiracy against the producer from beginning to end? A system by which he is robbed of the just fruits of his toil? When the producer is driven in self-defence to erect wheat warehouses, how long will it be before he enters other lines of business for himself, shipping the necessities of life into the country as well as his produce out of it? Business men would consider this an encroachment upon their special field that would work hardships to them, and yet they must all acknowledge that the situation demands a radical change for the producer.

AT LAST.

THE D., C. & N. IS HERE.

The case on trial at Moorhead this week resulted in favor of the D., C. & N. and on Wednesday morning arrangments were made for the crossing and the work commenced. The work of raising the grade two feet from the deep cut to the river was also commenced and it is expected that the road will be in complete running order by the last of this week. The court appointed E. C. Davis, of this city, William Davidson, of Euclid and John M. Boyle, of Red Lake Falls a committee of appraisal in the condemnation proceedings. At last we shall have the new road and the amount of business it has already done at Marin station shows how it will be appreciated.

A Trip to McIntosh.

Last Saturday we had the pleasure of a few hours visit at McIntosh. Upon arrival at the magnificent (?) St. P., M. & M. depot the first impression one gets (after being lost in admiration at the superb depot) is the extreme narrowness of the main street, which looks as though it had been laid out in the heart of the business portion of a city like New York, where land is way up in the thousands per front foot. This is a big mistake that will be seriously felt when McIntosh becomes a city of half a million retired millionaires. At present McIntosh is so proud of her depot that all other matters are of secondary consideration. This nondescript deserves more than a passing notice. It consists of a platform about 6x12 and a passenger coach may be stopped with the steps in front of it if the engineer is a skilfull manager. It is about four feet high, resembling a back-number New England horse block, covered by the beautiful arch of Nature's own blue sky, (if it aint raining,) and is so small that enough passengers cannot get upon it at once to break it down. When you are fortunate enough to alight upon it you can climb up to the street above without getting your feet muddy if it is not raining. The steps up to the streets are wonderful specimens of artistical skill, and must have cost some hard working Irishman a half-hour's hard work to construct. The cost of the whole must have exceeded $5 by some cents, but there is no sense in submitting the people of McIntosh to such an imposition as the road has had ample patronage to afford to build a comfortable depot. But McIntosh is no worse off than other stations along the line, in that particular. There are two good hotels, two newspapers and a goodly number of business houses, but McIntosh does not do the amount of business she should because the impression has obtained that other markets for wheat are more favorable, and much wheat goes to Fertile and other places on the Duluth & Manitoba. Our old friend, M. W. Jenson, formerly of Garden, is interested in a large flour mill, just erected, and as soon as the machinery can arrive and be placed therein, business will begin to hum. The average McIntosh citizen is a long suffering individual, but even he is beginning to get awful tired at the dilatory motion of the road in the depot matter and rumors are thick that a dray line will be established between Fertile and McIntosh to freight goods from the former point. A fine farming country is tributary to McIntosh, and there is no good reason why she should not become a flourishing trade center, with proper facilities.

A Free Market.

That is what we want, and that is what this system of grades does not give us. We have given the grading system a faithful trial and the producer is beaten every time while he has to pay big taxes every year to support the system that is beating him. We want a system to prevail that will allow buyers to go upon our markets and buy wheat according to the dictates of his own judgment then will we have an absolutely open and free market. The present system protects the buyer at the expense of the producer while the buyer is the best calculated to protect his own interests in the deal. The farmers should see that only such men are elected to the next Legislature as will go there to fight the present system and secure a market wherein our wheat may be sold on sample. With that kind of a market we would have a better chance to obtain for our wheat what is is worth and not only that but our farms would then command a price something near what they are worth so if a farmer should get in a pinch and should desire to he could sell his farm. Now, after raising wheat at a loss for several years and he finds himself badly in debt with no chance to sell his farm what can he do? Well, you hear about "skippers" and he is classed as a "first-class dead-beat," though he may have been struggling manfully against adverse circumstances that had not ought to exist for no one can say that there is no money in wheat when large fortunes are every year made in it. There is money in wheat and there is money in farming and it is to the interest of every man doing business in this country to see that the profits go where they rightfully belong. There is no country under the sun to-day where farmers could make more money than they can here if they can obtain simple justice, and that can only be obtained through a free and open market.

A. R. Holston has commenece an action for libel against the St. Paul Globe in the sum of $10.000 and one against the Red Lake Falls News for $5,000. These actions grew out of a sensational telegram to the Globe to the effect that Holston had insulted a lady at Red Lake Falls and the publication of the charges in the News. The lady denies the story under oath and to us it looks like political spite work. Holston is a prominent candidate for postmaster at the Falls. This may be the key to the situation or it is possible that the animous may be in the bitter real estate wrangles which do much abound in that city. Whatever the cause no one who knows Holston will take any stock in the yarn that he insulted an unprotected female.

We have a few choice grade cows left which we will offer at figures that will sell them if taken before provided with winter quarters.

Mississippi Valley Lumberman: Another lumberman is making a fortune in gold mining. Senator Sabin has picked up a quartz mine out beyond Fennallytown, within six miles of Washington. The property was called to Sabin's attention by Theodore Tyrer, an ex-Minnesotian, who has a special genius for discovering money making schemes. The assays made in New York and at the Philadelphia mint show an average of $35 a ton. The gold is of the finest quality. The senator's office here in Washington contains some beautiful specimens of rose and snow quartz, in which are threads and nuggets of the yellowest gold ever seen. Christian Wall, of Chicago, is interested with the ex-senator and they have put up capital to develop the property and get in a stamp mill. The business management is in Mr. Sabin's hands and Fred Norris, his old private secretary, is the secretary of the company. The yield already pays the labor payroll and a man can make good wages panning the fine rock and earth thrown out of the shaft.

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as follows:

Each year on his insurance	$88 44
Each year on his loan for interest	80 00
Total yearly payments	$ 168 44
Total for ten years	1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest	$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of	500 00
When the loan is due he pays	1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years	1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest	$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years	1000 00
Total	$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

TRUSTS UNLAWFUL.

Such is the Decision of the New York Supreme Court.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—In an editorial on the sugar trust decision, the Times says: The meaning of these two decisions is that making of so called trusts by the surrender of stock of corporations to trustees will not be permitted in the state of New York, and in effect that the trust plan must be abandoned in other states, for the laws of many other states concerning the powers and duties of corporations are like those of New York.

THE TRUST MUST GO.

Minneapolis Times.

The courts and public authorities generally have been slow to begin effective warfare against the trusts. There has not been perfect agreement as to where and how the fight should begin, and the desultory efforts to break down the power of these immense combinations have been heretofore unsuccessful. The capital of these giant corporations has retained legal talent able to protect its robberies of the people, and it has overawed most of the courts in which it has been on trial for transgression of the laws.

Now, however, the trust has apparently met its match and a New York court has rendered two decisions that cannot fail to prove the entering wedge that shall split wide open these destroyers of legitimate competition and enemies of the people. By the terms of the decisions rendered the making of so-called trusts by the surrender of the stock of corporations to trustees must be abandoned in New York—and of course in all other states having similar statutes. It is unlawful, and the statutes go far enough to make it the duty of the attorney general to bring action for the annulment of the charter of any corporation whenever such corporation shall have "forfeited its charter by abuse of its powers" or "by failure to exercise its powers," or whenever it shall have done or omitted any act which amounts to a surrender of its corporate rights, privileges and franchises, or whenever it shall have exercised "a franchise or privilege not conferred upon it by law."

This is a step in the direction of progress. It does not preclude the necessity for action by congress and the enactment of additional legislation in several of the states, but it is a powerful blow at monopoly and the beginning of relief for the people from its infamous extortions. The sugar trust is immediately affected, and it ought to be wiped out of existence with all of the celerity possible to vigorous enforcement of the law. In all the commercial history of the country no such outrageous combine has ever before flourished, and its robbery of sugar consumers has already amounted to hundreds of millions of dollars. It should be permanently destroyed, root and branch, and its reorganization upon any basis rendered wholly impossible. Every other unlawful combination of the same character should be proceeded against with equal vigor, and that is understood to be now the policy of the attorney general of New York where the important decisions referred to have been given. The early death of the trust is the imperative necessity of the time. The prosperity of the whole country is seriously threatened by it and it must go.

Farmers' Milch Cows.

Colman's Rural World.

It is not surprising that western farmers have taken kindly to the Holstein-Friesian breed of cattle as milch stock, when one looks at a herd in pasture, for their size, color, docility, as well as their magnificent bags and large teats commend them to every man who is any judge of stock, and whose line of business gives him a natural preference for good sized steers that will give him something to sell when matured. Farmers, without exception, like that which has size and which turns the scale away up near to 2,000 lbs. at three years old, and gives him an ample return for every pound of food it has consumed. Here is the secret of the preference of the English for that grand race of cattle brought to perfection by themselves on their own luscious and luxurious pastures, the noble Shorthorn. There is something tangible in a milch cow weighing from 1,300 to 2,000 lbs., that will give a pailful of rich milk morning and evening, and a calf modeled after her own size and style every year. There is something forthcoming in that kind of animal which every man can appreciate; there is evidently money in it, and the cow is in many cases the British farmer's rent paying animal, come he from Ireland, Scotland or England. Had the Shorthorn in this country been kept and reared for milk as she has on thousands of farms on her native pastures, there would have been little room for the black-and-white Dutch cattle in America, for they were early given the preference by the enterprising and observing farmers of this country, and as a consequence are now found distributed all over the continent as no others are; but their beef-making proclivities have been developed at the expense of their milking in a majority of cases, hence the Holstein steps in and fills the place which properly belongs to the English breed.

When we find a cow capable of converting grass into milk to the tune of from 50 to 70 lbs. a day without effort, and of producing a calf every year which at three years shall be either a fac simile of herself or a grand steer worth even to-day from $70 to $80, there is no wonder, we say, that men should give them the preference. Then we consider the question of constitution and vigor, the ever and everywhere desirable attributes of hardiness and of rustlers, where can we find it better developed than this same hardy black-and-white Dutch cow? The farmer who has a goodly herd of these can afford to hear them sneeringly spoken of by the kid glove dairymen who can see nothing good in size unless it be in proportion to its diminutiveness. This is one of the instances in which he who sneers is prejudiced and he who laughs last laughs longest. A herd of Holsteins is a desideratum on every farm.

A great reduction in subscription rates is announced by the publishers of The Breeder's Gazette. This beautifully printed and handsomely illustrated periodical is so generally conceded to stand at the head of all papers of its class that we need only say that it is regarded as an absolute necessity by all who are making a study of the breeding, feeding and management of any description of live stock. It has heretofore cost $3 per year, but can now be had, under a special offer just announced, at $2 for single subscriptions, and at $1.50 where five names or more are obtained. Send for sample copy and terms and list of prizes to agents, to the publishers, the J. H. Sanders Pub. Co., 226 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

The Many Against Four.

The Western Rural.

The time was when the live stock breeder and feeder was pretty independent and saucy. He was on the wave of prosperity, and it was common to say to the grain farmer; You are away behind the times. Go into live stock and make money. But times have changed. The live stock breeder is making no more than anybody else. He is down in the valley with all the balance of our producers. He comes to the city occasionally and may walk through the great meat markets. He finds that the best steaks are selling for sixteen and eighteen cents, and he can hardly believe it. Why are retail prices so out of proportion to the prices for cattle? The answer is plain enough. The Big Four at the Union Stock Yords are running things to suit themselves. They have their strong, relentless grip upon the cattle industry of the country and they are making use of their tyrannical usurpation for the satisfaction of their own greed. You must sell them cattle at just what they choose to pay. They set the price of cattle. They are absolutely supreme in their power of dictation. They have set themselves up as the dictators of prices, and the Big Four are masters of the cattle yards of the great west. But when they get the cattle, they can just as easily set the prices upon other meats that they have to sell as they can upon the cattle they wish to buy.

Cattle men know how grossly unjust they are treated by this arrogant meat trust, that they have been trying to break its grip upon their throats. Minnesota and Ohio passed laws against permitting this trust to do their cut-throat businets in these states. But the courts seem determined to overthrow the meat inspection laws. Congress sent out a committee to investigate the matter, but Mr. Armour refused to obey a summons to appear before the committee. Nor is it likely that the senate will compel him to do so. Mr. Armour is most too rich for the United States senate to monkey with. There seems to be but one remedy for such a state of things, and that is for the people to combine and change the character of the senate. We do not believe that the meat-producers of this country will continue to submit to the imposition that is being practiced upon them by the Big Four. The millions will not submit to be trampled upon by the insignificant few.

The Best Yet.

We have been readers of "Peterson" for a long while—but, excellent as we have always found it, we consider this year the best yet. The December number cannot be surpassed in the beauty of its engravings and the interest of its contents. The paper on "Picturesque San Jose" is admirably written and illustrated, and the other stories and articles are all capital. "Things Worth Knowing" gives some "New Christmas Games," which will prove most acceptable to the young people, and the needle-work department offers numerous charming designs for holiday presents. Practical, useful, interesting, there is no other lady's book which compares with "Peterson." Indeed, it fills a range so wide and varied and is so admirable from a literary and artistic point of view, that it meets the requirements of an entire household as no other magazine can. Next year, it will be better worth having than ever, with its new cover and type and various other improvements. A subscription for 1890 would make a valuable and useful holiday present. Terms: Two dollars a year, with greatly reduced club rates. A sample copy will be sent to those desiring to get up clubs. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A Canadian Herd.

It afforded a representative of the London Advertiser no little pleasure recently to take a trip through portions of Zorra, in North Oxford, well known as one of the most thriving agricultural districts of Canada. The evidence of general thrift, the well-tilled fields, carefully handled herds, and especially the substantial farm buildings, were a valuable testimony to the intelligent industry of the Germans who predominate in the district visited. Some time was spent visiting the the farm of Messrs. H. & W. F. Bollert of Cassel, a few miles distant from the village of Tavistock, on the G. T. R. It was as a result of observations there and conversation with Mr. H. Bollert that the Advertiser deduces the two cardinal principles which appear at the head of this article as being those upon which a painstaking and successful effort is being made to conduct this farm. To farmers and stockbreeders generally these principles and others closely related may be safely commended. Liberal feeding and good management must go hand in hand with intelligent breeding, and the better the quality of the animal the more certainly will it respond to generous care.

Wide awake to improvements and the advancing necessities of the times Mr. Bollert has prepared to construct a silo, using a large mow in the barn for the purpose. He could not use it to better advantage. Stock, especially milch cows, must have succulent food in the long winter season. The great advantage of ensilage for this purpose has been demonstrated thousands of times. The possibilities of the system seem almost unlimited.

A windmill several hundred yards distant forces an abundant supply of water through pipes to the stock barn, where a large oblong wooden tank, partly indoors and partly out, provides all the animals with drink twice a day in the winter season. This is better we are convinced, than an excessive draught once a day. At the time of the Advertiser's visit Mr. Bollert was feeding his cows in addition to hay and straw, four quarts of grain twice a day, the ration being composed of two parts bran and one of oat chaff, his roots being exhausted. For a few weeks the calves receive new milk and then skim milk, to which is added a little oil cake. They are taught to eat bran (dry) and also whole oats, in which Mr. Bollert has great faith. During the first week calves receive milk three times per day. Mr. Bollert contemplates the breeding of fall or early winter calves, which, when coupled with a properly managed silo for feeding the cows, he believes to be the preferable system. In summer short pastures are supplemented with four quarts of bran twice a day and fodder corn, with the best results in the case of milch cows.

Mr. Bollert keeps none but Holstein cattle on his farm. He began importing and breeding in October, 1883, with with a purchase of three yearling heifers, one heifer calf and one bull calf. Including that importation and many others made since, some $10,000 has been invested in pure-bred Holsteins. Has it paid? is a question that a practical farmer would naturally ask. Mr. Bollert replies in the affirmative. For one yearling heifer, as a case in point, $400 was paid. In five years her offsprings brought $825 and she was then sold for $300. During the period, it might also be mentioned, one of her calves died, so that this return was less than it would otherwise have been. Mr. Bollert considers that she was the best investment he ever made. In 1884 four head were imported from B. B. Lord's great stock farm at Sinclairville, N. Y., including the cow, any age, at Provincial Fair of 1886, and the bull, Barnton, now at the head of their herd, winner of First Prize and Silver Medal at the same exhibition. Barnton is a remarkably fine animal, and he ought to be, for his breeding is exceptional being sired by the great Barrington, whose dam gave 99 lbs. in a day. Barrington's sire was Jacob 2d, whose progeny have been uniformly wonderful milk and putter producers. Barnton's dam was Baroness S., with a milk record of 93½ lbs. in a single day. Among other importations were Bonnie Queen, the great cow Trijntje, record 95 lbs. milk in a day and 18 lbs. 9 ozs. unsalted butter in seven days, Geldertje, 84 lbs. of milk in a day and 19 lbs. butter in seven days, Lady Westwould, milk 80½ lbs. in a day and 18½ lbs. butter in seven days, and representatives of Jennie B. and other celebrated families. Mr. Bollert has procured a large proportion of his foundation stock from Messrs. Lord, for many years making personal selections of the very best stock obtainable in Holland. It was De Kol, one of their importations, that recently made the largest, save one, seven-day butter record of any Holstein cow in the world, viz., 33 lbs. 6 ozs. of unsalted butter. In addition to the importation Bollert Bros., have bred 44 animals, and the herd at present numbers about 33, including from 18 to 20 breeding cows. In the production of milk and butter Mr. Bollert has had splendid success; and though he has few opportunities for testing the breed for beef, owing to the keen demand for them as breeders, he instances one case where he had a heifer that failed to breed. She was very thin when he started to feed her. This was in 1888. After two months she turned the scale at 1,630 lbs. being then past three years old. In December he sold her for Christmas beef, she then weighing 1,880 lbs. During 60 days she gained four pounds a day on an average. Mr. Bollert is a Holstein enthusiast from experience, and all he asks is that the breed receive a fair show among the others of the land, under which circumstances they will more than hold their own. Not only is Mr. B. a farmer of enterprise and sagacity, but the Advertiser found him a genial and hospitable host.

Deliberation in Buying.

Prairie Farmer.

Not a few will take advantage of the leisure hours of the present fall to cast about, if they have a herd, to add to it, or otherwise to start anew. First impressions are, in many cases, lasting, yet not always safe to follow in a business undertaking. The man who wins a first prize at a fair, upon live stock, is to be commended for his skill, whether this be in the direction of his skill as a breeder, a buyer, or a mere feeder.

Without any reference to which of the three avenues his success is due, with the novice, the triumph places him on somewhat of a high plane in the direction his effort has taken. The novice will reason that his success points to knowledge and skill, hence, why should he not be a good man to buy from? No man of experience, however, will build hopes upon any single occurrence of the kind; and the beginner will begin to act with discretion in seeking for foundations to build upon, rather than to be taken by the evidences furnished alone in the prize ring.

The substantial gain secured, and to be sought, in providing one's self with farm animals that we may have a market at home for our feed, is found to rest in the fact that the capabilities of the improved beast are far greater in the direction of flesh-making or milk production than in the case of the scrub.

The buying of farm beasts should be carried on upon the same general plan we bring to our aid in buying a piece of machinery, namely, that a reasonably fair promise must be apparent that we have a means through which to reach a given end. In the case of machinery, economy of fuel, with ability to turn off a good deal of work for fuel consumed, are leading considerations. So likewise, in the case of the farm beast, our hope of profit from feed consumed lies in the adaptability of the animal for the particular sort of usefulness for which it is bred.

The cost of keeping, is, in an economic view, a question that takes rank with the all-important one of blood and breeding. In raising a crop the selection of seed is of the first importance, yet the cost of the seed, when placed side by side with the use of land and the tillage and harvesting, cuts but a small figure in the entire outlay in raising the crop. This fairly illustrates the two main facts involved in stock-growing, namely, that nothing good can come of animals indifferently bred; yet after you have produced the first-class colt, calf or pig, the tedious and expensive thing yet remains to be done, viz.: to care for and feed to maturity for market.

When we have come fully to realize the fact that we build, by a more or less tedious process, a 2,000-lb steer from a starting point in weight of 100 lbs or less, we should be able—comparing the animals to a machine—to understand the importance of seeing to it that the machine is properly constructed.

To have an economical way of warming a house is of the highest importance, because the house is a fixture, to stand through a series of years. To secure farm animals that respond promptly to the food they consume, is of equal importance; and no successful live stock husbandry can be instituted on any other basis. We cannot build a capacious house on a narrow foundation; neither can we hope, by any expenditure of feed, be it ever so liberal and well selected, to add width and capacity to the beast having narrow hips and chest.

Deliberation, therefore, means, in this case, taking ample time to study the ends sought, keeping in mind the fact that a deposit and growth in the better parts of the body of the fattening beast may be likened to a deposit of money where a liberal interest will be returned. If low-priced flesh prevails in a given animal, no skill in feeding can compensate for this fault. We have been too much accustomed to permitting animals to grow up around us without taking account of the comparative growth of animals side by side in the same pastures—at any rate, no account based upon close estimates.

In selecting a herd to breed from, if errors are found to have crept in, it will pay in the end to fatten these for market rather than to encumber the premises with their progeny. Expending feed on such, except in so far as it is required to get them off the premises to advantage, may be likened to building a house for use in a cold climate, leaving openings therein through which much heat will escape. In one case we build up animals through which to waste food, and in the other, we build to waste fuel.

It now and then happens that beginners fail in keeping up the conditions in which they found animals at the time of purchase. One of the most important points to be deliberated upon, is the question as to the limit of expenditure that may be profitably put upon a collection or herd of farm beasts. Wisdom in buying from a neglected herd will quite generally pay, while to buy from an over-fed herd will, as a rule, be disappointing.

Are They the Lost Tribes of Israel?

New York Sun: When Stanley Africanus was in this country several years ago he gave it as his firm opinion that there is a white or light colored people somewhere in the heart of Africa, and he entertained the preposterous notion that they might possibly be the lost tribes of Israel. He said that he had found traditions of such a people among the natives of the regions through which he had traveled, and who believed that they were yet in existence. Livingstone himself entertained some fancies about this matter, which he had gathered during his wanderings, but he died without throwing any light upon it. We shall doubtless soon learn whether Stanley has found any during the last few years. Over a hundred years ago Swedenborg told of the existence of a civilized people in the unexplored parts of Africa, the spirits of some of whom he conversed with in the other world. The fact that he spoke of these people as "Gentiles" might seem to preclude the idea of their being Jews, but the term Gentiles was used by him to describe men born out of the Christian church. It would be hard to believe that the lost tribes of Israel are in equatorial Africa, or, if there, that none of their members have ever traveled away from it in the course of ages. But we will wait for news by Stanley.

Some professors of chemistry and geology are claiming, says the Northwestern Agriculturist, that cheese is hard to digest, and the cheese makers and dairymen are up in arms about it, claiming that pure cheese, properly cured is easy of digestion. In this discussion the dairymen have the advantage, as pure cheese has been recognized as nourishing and easily digested food for generations, and its indigestibility was never heard of until the fashion of adulterating it with animal fats and cotton seed oil came in. Oleomargarine butter and adulterated cheese is pretty certain to give sundry and divers twinges to the stomachs not ironclad, but genuine cheese, made from the whole milk, and properly cured is not only easily digested but is an actual aid to digestion.

Lack of Honor.

Western Rural.

If it were not for the watered stock, the railroad business would be paying splendidly to-day. That great evidence of fraud must be crushed out, and the only way that we have ever been able to see how that could be done, is for Congress to provide that the railroad commission should annually estimate the present value of a railroad, and fix such rates as would enable it to earn, say six per cent. upon the valuation. We have not the slightest doubt that some people think The Rural is "cranky" on this matter of railroad mismanagement. It is true that it has been harping on it for a dozen years, but it is a rank swindle upon the public and The Rural does not mean to let up on it until the roads are made to treat the public with fairness. But The Rural is not the only journal that recognizes the true character of railroad management. For a number of years it seemed to be the only one. But even a portion of the daily press now stands with The Rural in its estimate of the true inwardness of American railroading. One of the most influential of our Chicago dailies recently said this: With a few exceptions Western railroad managers and financiers trace the troubles of the transportation companies to the Inter-State commerce act and measures of State legislation in the west. They seem pretty well agreed that such enactments have put the railroads in a position where they must organize a trust or go into bankruptcy. President Adams, of the Union Pacific, while regarding a trust as the only panacea, is not disposed to ignore the real source of railroad troubles and charge the Inter-State act with consequences which are owing to the folly, fraud and mismanagement of railroad officials and investors themselves. Excessive railroad building, paralleling, and stock watering have brought about the present bad condition of the railroad business. Like blunders and abuses would cause trouble in any other business, and railroad companies have no immunity from the legitimate consequences of fraud and folly.

In his address before the Boston Commercial Club, Mr. Adams said that while he did not approve the Inter-State act in every particular he saw "no good reason for referring to it in the way so common of late." Rather than put up the Inter-State act as "a cat in a bottle to shoot at," Mr. Adams employed himself in showing with great perspicuity that the difficulty with the railroads is not owing to any statute but to the present bad management by railroad officials themselves, as well as to the past blunders and frauds pepetrated by stock jobbers, wreckers, and parallel line builders. "The difficulty," said Mr. Adams, "does not lie in any act of legislation, National or State, and it does not lie in the covetousness, want of good faith, and low moral tone of those in whose hands the management of the railroad system now is—in a word, in the absence among them of any high standard of commercial honor."

He says further: "The railroad system of this country, especially of the region west of Chicago, is to-day managed on principles which—unless a change of heart occurs, and that soon—must inevitably lead to financial disaster of the most serious kind. There is among the lines composing that system an utter disregard of those fundamental ideas of truth, fair play and fair dealing which lie at the foundation not only of the Christian faith but of civilization itself.

The Rural certainly has reason to believe that after such talk by a railroad man himself, this journal will never be accused of harshness toward railroads even by railroad men themselves. Mr. Adams has put the whole crowd down about as low as it can get.

How they do Things at Washington.

The Western Rural.

An important error on the part of the house enrolling clerk has been discovered. The sundry civil bill as passed by the house contained an item of $25,000 for the construction and improvement of suitable roads and bridges in the Yellowstone National park. The senate increased that amount to $50,000 and as a compromise the conference committee agreed to the original amount of $25,000, but also agreed to the following clause to come in at the end of the paragraph, "and in addition to said amount $25,000 to be expended in constructing a road upon such route as may be surveyed and selected by the engineer officer detailed for duty in the park, from the upper geyser basin, thence around the southern shore of Shoshone Lake and across the continental divide to the west arm of the Yellowstone Lake, then along the western shore of Yellowstone Lake to Lake Outlet, and along the Yellowstone River to the falls and grand canyon, then from the falls down the Yellowstone River to a junction with the present road to Cook City; in all $50,000." The bill was enrolled without this amendment and reported correctly enrolled.

Don't we pay enough for the kind of service we receive at Washington? Congressmen don't know half the time what they are voting on, and the clerks don't know half the time what laws have been passed and what bills have been rejected.

At Last They Confess.

"The Country Elevator Pays Four or Five Cents Per Bushel Less Than the Wheat Can be Sold For."

It has been an open secret for several years that the producer has been getting less than his rightful share for his wheat, and a few years since a grand kick was made by the farmers all along the line. Complaints were loud and long until the elevator men, the millers and the railroad magnates began to get uneasy, and prominent men went abroad through the land to "investigate (?)" the matter. They held meetings and gravely assured the farmers in honied tones "that they were really losing money in the elevator business; that the only reason they kept the elevators open at all was simply to provide the farmers a sure market all the year round!" They brought along extracts from great big books to back up their statements. The result of the agitation was the creation of a Board of Railway and Warehouse Commissioners, and the farmers were generously allowed one representative on that Board, (but had no voice in selecting him, by a long shot). Why did the farmers create that Board? They created it for the purpose of obtaining relief from the unjust system in vogue whereby they were yearly wronged out of thousands of dollars, and they have yearly paid heavy taxes to support this system, which, if the following article taken from the Chicago Tribune, is true, has not benefitted the farmer one iota. The Tribune says:

"The London Financial Times, of Oct. 24th, announces that the shares and debentures of the Chicago & Northwest Granaries company are "over applied for" and that the list is closed. The capitalization is equal to about $1,200,000, in shares of $50 each, and the profits are expected to be not less than 15 per cent. per annum. The property comprises the Star elevator at Minneapolis, a flour mill at Canby, and seventy-five elevators along the line of the Chicago & Northwestern road in Minnesota and Dakota. The business is reported in the prospectus as having paid dividends of 28 per cent. in 1886, 22 per cent. in 1887, and 30 per cent. in 1888. The information is given that the country elevator pays four or five cents per bushel less than the wheat can be sold for, and also that it does "considerable" in selling coal, seed, salt, etc., to the farmers at the same time that the grain is bought.

The statement is interesting as conveying a much clearer idea of the character and extent of the business than is possesed by the average citizen here. And there is little doubt that the averments are substantially true, as they have been made the subject of verification by experts sent out from the old country. It is told that the certified profits, as above noted, have been made on rates which were little above 50 per cent. of the maximum rates allowed by law; that the business incurs no mercantile risk, as the grain is immediately resold either for present or future delivery, while the company is "protected by a margin, as in banking transactions, thus avoiding all elements of a speculative nature." The public is also assured that there is room for much further development."

What a revelation is herein contained! When these speculators are in our market for our wheat they tell us that they are actually losing money handling our wheat, but when they wish to sell their mills and elevators they tell the purchaser that they have had the softest kind of a snap. They boast of having made big money in "1886, in 1887 and 1888," and they say there is "room for

of the business. That is to say that they have not wronged the producer out of quite all the system will warrant, but that they might have given No. 3 or rejected for all of the wheat and sold it for No. 1 Hard and No. 1 Northern. The fact that under the present system the buyer absolutely controls the market, seems to indicate clearly that the system is wrong and should be abolished or changed. The farmers hoped the creation of a Board of Warehouse and Railroad Commissioners would work the needed change, but it does not seem to do so. Under this system the farmer sees no No. 1 Hard given, but plenty of "Pillsbury's Best" and other No. 1 Hard brands of flour in the market. He sees in his home market a difference of from 15 to 20 cents between rejected and No. 3, but both grades selling on sample in Minneapolis for the same price. He sees his wheat in his home market put down one grade at least below what it really is, in order (so he is told) "that it may be sure to hold out grade with the State Inspectors!" If this is not a system in favor of the buyer against the producer, what is it? And the farmer has to pay for it all. We believe that a Board, properly created, could and would be of great benefit, but a different system, a system that gives the producer an equal show, must be invented. Rebellions, before now, have sprung from far less provocations than those under which the producer labors, and yet he does not seem to rouse worth a cent. We do not know how more powerful arguments for forming an alliance of farmers could be found than are contained in the Chicago Tribunes article from the London Times. It was through an alliance of their interests that the speculators were enabled to control the markets, and we do not see any other course open to farmers by which to meet it. They should sink every other consideration in the effort to obtain their rights in a free and open market. They have been successful in the past and they can easily be in the future if they act as a unit. There is no way to do that except by an alliance for mutual protection and defense. Does any one doubt that if every farmer in Polk County should demand anything of either of the political parties, it would be granted? So it would be all over the state, for the farmers are in the majority.

Foreign Sleeping Cars.

A gentleman who has just returned from the grand tour of Europe gives an amusing description of the idea the French and Germans seem to have of comfort, as exemplified in the sleeping cars run on their railroads. The cars are hardly up to the grade of an American first-class coach in construction, while the berths are suspended by cords from the roof, in the Erie canal boat style of forty years ago. The bedding—unless the traveler carries his own—consists of a couple of blankets, sheets being something unknown. The toilet room contains water, a tin basin, a cup, and a soap dish, towels and soap being furnished by the patrons of the car. The only thing American is the presence of a porter, who expects a "tip." How long would such an arrangement be endured by the American public? "The Burlington" equipments are all Pullman's latest and best, and it is the favorite line to Chicago and St. Louis for all who like comfort and safety. For tickets and all information apply to local agent, or to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agt., C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

The Age of Greed.

The Western Rural.

Never in the whole history of the world has greed been so rampant as it is to-day. Yet greed has destroyed some of the most flourishing communities that have ever existed, and it would have utterly destroyed this republic before now but for exceptional circumstances that have been favorable to the people. Our immense area of cheap lands has been our salvation so far, and as these are taken up, and land becomes more valuable, the condition of the masses grows worse. The spirit of greed grows stronger as it feeds upon its prey, until now it presents in this country the most revolting picture of depraved humanity that human eye ever rested upon. It makes practical traitors of citizens. There are men in this country who know that their greed is weakening the republic just as well as Jefferson Davis knew that his course was in the direction of the destruction of the union. The rich criminal class—the men whose lives are devoted to money getting by trampling upon the rights of others, know that their love of money is superior to their love of country. They coin both peace and war into dollars. They solidify the sweat in the harvest field and the blood of patriots on the battle field into wealth. They are a living, moving, heartless organization of greed.

It remains for the people to say if the age shall not be turned from one of greed into an age of patriotism and humanity. Man is too noble a being, too nobly gifted, and with too grand possibilities to descend to the level of an idol worship. As a people our opportunities to achieve nobly for the human race throughout all time are too great to be thrown away by ourselves, or for us to permit a few reckless men of absorbing greed to throw them away. As men, as patriots, and as well wishers of the human race, let us come together and assert our power. As matters now promise, in twenty-five years this country will be an Ireland. We not only have men who are native born who would make it so, but European capitalists are coming here to monopolize all our great industries, and to exercise their well trained instincts of oppression. There never will be in the whole future exerience of the world, as there never has been in its past history, a time when men can assert the manhood of man and rights of the masses as they can to-day in this United States of America. Come, let us emerge from our lethargy and bid greed stand back and give honesty, decency and patriotism a chance. Posterity will hold us responsible. Our own children will hold us responsible. Let no prejudices, partisan or otherwise, keep the people from standing breast to breast in the demand for legislation to check the rampant spirit of greed that is sapping the life out of our republic. Good laws and the faithful execution of laws are what we want and what we must have. But we must stand together in order to get either.

Horsemen everywhere are speaking in the highest terms of The Breeder's Gazette, and those of our people who are interested either in draft or trotting-bred stock will be interested in learning that the subscription price of this popular and old-established weekly has been reduced from $3 to $2, and can be had even as low as $1.50 per year in clubs of five or more. Its turf department is in the capable hands of Mr. H. T. White of the Chicago Daily News, the editor of John Splan's "Life With the Trotters;" and its draft-horse matter is confessedly far ahead of that obtainable from any other source. The Gazette is a thoroughly good "all round" live stock paper—cattle, sheep, and swine all coming in for good attention—and should be largely read in this county. Sample copies and terms to agents on application to the J. H. Sanders Pub. Co., 226 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

The November Wide Awake is likely to be much sought, read and preserved, on account of its portrait of Helen Hunt in her young womanhood; it is engraved from the charcoal by Miss Bartol made for "Susan Coolidge," from a precious old daguerreotype. It gives the idea of a gay, happy young woman, and is most pleasant to look upon. The accompanying article is by Susan Coolidge; it is full of fresh anecdote and gives the story of "The Naughtiest Day of my Life," as "H. H." one day related it herself to her friend. A very delightful article for boys is about "Jack-knives," with twenty-one pictures, the joint work of Professor Mason and Mr. Chandlee of the Smithsonian; and a very delightful story for them is by William O. Stoddard, "The Big Gun's Game." Another jolly story is by Alice W. Wheildon, entitled "A Novel Postman," good Thanksgiving Day reading. Mrs. Fremont tells how she went to an Odd Fellow's Ball in California, and camped out on Mount Bullion, fronting the Yosemite. Mrs. Claflin's Daisy-Pattie Letter gives certain warnings to young people, drawn from the mistakes and ignorance of people elected to fill high places in our government; we learn that this admirable series of Behavior Letters will continue through 1890. Margaret Sidney's Peppers serial comes to a close, but the reader confidently adds an au revoir as he sees the delightful family off for Europe. The Susan Coolidge serial, "A Little Knight of Labor," ends too, with a new partnership formed for life-long work; this story might be acted upon by many a town girl wishing to earn money. Mrs. White's Public School Cooking series, in closing, tells how young women may get their training as Teachers of School Cooking; Professor Starr finishes his "Geological Talks;" the last of the "Famous Stones" stories gives the history of two celebrated jewels—the Tara Brooch, and the Shrine of St. Patrick's Bell—an unique chapter. The poems of the number are by Mrs. Whiton-Stone, Margaret Eytinge, Mrs. Henderson, Louise Pohlman and A. R. Wells. "Men and Things" is full of original anecdotes and talk; excellent are "A Pioneer School," by J. L. Harbour, "The Art of Giving and Forgetting, by Mary Twombly, "The Ghost of Fort Donelson," by M. S., and "A Dilemma," by Sallie Joy White; this department alone is worth the subscription price, $2.40 a year. The December number is to be much enlarged. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

Who Is It?

Monitor, Clarion, Iowa.

Who gets the profits on beef when the farmer sells it for two cents on foot and the consumer pays six to twelve and a half cents for it dressed? Armour and his associates say they are not making big profits. Butchers declare they are not making a living. There is a nigger in the woodpile somewhere, but the query is: Where is he? There is a big profit to somebody, for no man with three grains of common sense will claim that it costs so much money to slaughter and sell it. Some one is telling lies. Who is it?

Northwestern Agriculturist: The investigation of the United States Senate Committee and the decisions of the Courts declaring the inspection laws passed to check the great beef combine unconstitutional, have served to center public attention on this bold and aggressive monopoly. It stands, now, without excuse, robbing the consumer and dictating prices to the producer, collecting by forde enormous profits, and practically driving out of the beef producing business thousands of farmers. The states are powerless to check the growth of this combine. Will Congress move in this matter and give the people some relief? If the wrongs done by the beef combine do not cry loud enough to reach the ear of the average congressman he must be deaf indeed.

Northwestern Agriculturist: A city man, who cannot make his income balance his family expenses, asks if he can hope to make a living by farming. He has $1,500 to invest and was "brought up" on a farm, but has lived in a city for thirty-six years. He has five children, the oldest a girl of fourteen, and the youngest a boy of four. There are hundreds of such cases in all cities. When pinching times come, the men who were farmer's boys remember the farm and apparent freedom from want, and long for release from the necessity of a constant struggle to "keep up appearances" and the anxiety which wears the life out of many city men and women. Many such men leave the city and try farming, and those of methodical business habits, who have not had the flexibility worked out of them in the tread-mill of city work, make excellent farmers. They have to learn the business over again, but bringing mature judgment to it, they make few mistakes and their business experience is an aid in many ways. Much depends on the disposition of the women and children of the household. The mother, if fond of society, would be likely to find the isolation of farm life irksome, and yet many women brought up in a city find life on a farm especially delightful and full of happiness. Children, too, differ in their liking for the country. Most children love the country and thrive in it, and are very helpful on a farm, and grow to manhood and womanhood strong and vigorous physically, and with knowledge of great value that the city bred child never gets. If they have become accustomed to the idle ways of most city children, and have come to think that the proper career for children is to be generally useless, they will not take to country life, and homesickness in the family will make life a burden. In this, as in many other cases where important decisions must be made, everything depends on the family and its training and habits. One family would be happy and prosperous in the country, another would be unhappy and unsuccessful. The time has not gone by when a "living" can surely be made on a farm by men who know how and are willing to work.

THE JOURNAL is informed that Mr. Frank Bivins' experience with the Holsteins is very satisfactory to that gentleman. They have done more than to furnish him groceries and provisions besides supplying his table with choice dairy butter meantime. Mr. Bivins considers the Holstein the leading dairy cow.

Fred Rauch took a good tumble to himself on Sunday which might have been more serious than it was. He was skating on the river and did not see an air-hole till he went into it. Then he realized it but fortunately the river was not deep at that point and he escaped with nothing more serious than a good drenching.

Fred Anderson took a trip to Duluth last week. Says the Crookston people there are all doing well. A party of North Dakota politicians went south Sunday evening, headed by Col. C. A. Lounsbury, the veteran of the early days of Dakota, enroute for Bismarck. If you fellows over there are unable to agree upon a U. S. Senator why don't you try the genial Col. for one of 'em? You might go a great ways further and fare very much worse. With the Col. your true Dakota interests would be absolutely safe, then why take your chances with a carpet-bagger? Gil Pierce? Yes, he's all right but the Col. is every way just as good. N. G. Ordway? Bah, if you fellows prefer No Good Ordway to Col. Lounsbury you will richly deserve all you will get with him.

The ladies are invited to call at Mrs. E. E. Bangs' fashionable millinery parlors on Second street.

W. L. Sargeant lift on Tuesday's train via Manitoba for Dundas, Rice County to visit with his old parents before leaving for Paso Rubles, California, where he will remain until next fall at least. Mr. Sargeant came to Crookston in March 1877 and by dint of skill in his profession and industry built up a comfortable income. He still owns a fine farm near Warren. Time was when W. L. had all the business here he could attend to, everybody knew "Sarg" and he was obliged to be on the go night and day, and then he could not keep up with his orders. Far and near his services were in demand and he leaves many warm friends who will wish him abundant success should he decide to remain out on the western coast.

Good Vermont gray overcoats $2, at the C. O. D. Clothing House.

O. H. Richardson is one of the careful, conservative farmers of Polk County whose first experience in farming was gained in Polk County and his views are not without value being wholly practical and common sense. In the first place he says that he believes, in order to get the best results a man must study the needs of his soil and understand them as he believes that different soils require different treatment. He thinks wheat requires a solid seed bed and that it is impossible to get our soil too solid. He does not believe in late fall plowing but if obliged to plow after Oct. 1st would plow very shallow. Thinks that summer fallowing is the best treatment for our soils, recomends broadcast seeding and rolling. Some of his neighbors condemned rolling last spring but his experience convinces him that it is the proper thing to do and it should be done as soon as possible after sowing. On one piece of ground, tried in this manner his yield was 33 bushels per acre and his lightest yield was 20 bushels, all No. 1 Hard.

AND THE PEOPLE REJOICE.

At 3:45 p. m., on Thursday Nov. 14th the crossing of the Manitoba railroad was completed and the first engine crossed and a few minutes later awoke the echoes on the Addition. The balance of the week was spent in fixing up the track and putting the road in running order. Upon the arrival of the engine and caboose at the depot she was met by a number of our citizens and a little ovation indulged in. After an hour or so the engine pulled out for Fertile on the return trip. The road has already been of great benefit in handling wheat and will no doubt do a good business when everything is in ship shape.

Chris Houston has purchased a number of fine Cotswold sheep and will hereafter pay some attention to sheep.

Ole S. Baugen was up from the west-side to see about the purchase of a fine bull from THE JOURNAL stock farm.

Hack & Gallasch succeeded to the business of Friedrich & Hack on November 28th, 1881, and have done a big business. Mr. Gallasch intends to close out the entire stock by January 1st next.

A. R. Holston writes us that our diagnosis of the rumor affecting him was a correct one but says that he does not lay it to either of the rival aspirants for the position of postmaster nor to the present incumbent, all of whom he considers too honorable to do such a thing. THE JOURNAL did not accuse any of these gentleman.

E. E. Abbott, one of Mentor's prominent farmers gave us a pleasant visit on Friday of last week leaving with us $1.50 to credit on one year's subscription. Mr. A. says his neighbors are shipping their wheat and beating home prices from 15 to 20 cents. If our present system was the best that could be had such things would not occur. Who will suggest a remedy?

Mrs. E. E. Bangs reports her business extra good for October and no wonder such goods will sell at the extremely low prices she puts upon them. Her trade extends west as far as Devils Lake which shows that she can successfully compete with Grand Forks in every particular. If the best goods for little money is an object call and see what she offers at the new millinery parlors on Second street.

Mr. H. G. Palmer started for the west on Saturday evening of last week. His partner left earlier in the week via the N. P. R. R. with a carload of choice stock, consisting of one Cleveland Bay Stallion, one Clyde and one Norman, all imported stock five head of Norman mares, four work horses, a fine young roadster a number of four-year-old colts and two Holstein-Friesian cows. They are having a large stock barn built in Tacoma and will ship stock to that country for sale. Situated as we are farmers should find it profitable to raise stock for that market. Mr. Palmer will be back here by next spring and may again become a resident of Crookston if his plans all work satisfactorily.

The fair young bride has been a resident of Polk County for a number of years, coming when quite a young girl and growing up in our midst. The happy couple will go to housekeeping in the house on the corner of Broadway and Fletcher Street, opposite the Malette Block. THE JOURNAL adds its blessing and most hearty congratulations.

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as follows:

Each year on his insurance $88 44
Each year on his loan for interest........................... 80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years..........1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest...........................$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of.......... 500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years........................... 1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest..........................$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years..... 1000 00

Total.............................$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

A ROMANTIC WEDDING.

Miss Mary Murphey and Mr. Frank Height were married here Thursday evening. The groom having a particular friend whom he wished to have officiate, Mr. J. Bernes, the Justice of Norman County, he was sent for, but upon his arrival it was found that he had no power to officiate in Polk County, so the parties drove to the nearest point in Norman County and were married in their buggy; they then drove back to the bride's home where a bountiful repast awaited them, and the evening was spent with music and dancing. The bride is one of the most amiable young ladies of Beltrami, and the groom one of our most popular young men. They received some lovely presents, and have the best wishes of a host of friends.

MONEY TO LOAN

JOHN MCLEAN.

A Cold Storage House.

THE JOURNAL learns that our fellow townsman, Mr. F. Bivins is interested in a project for building a cold storage house in this city for the purpose of buying selling and shipping eggs and butter. The house will cost to build it $10,000 and the company asks a bonus of only $2,000 from the city. When we come to estimate the value of such an institution in our midst the amount asked is trifling in comparison. One house of the kind at Waterloo, Iowa pays out an average of over $150,000 per annum for butter and eggs. There is no reason why a cold storage house in Crookston could not do equally as well if the produce could be had and with a ready cash market at hand it would not be long before it could readily be had. Add that amount to the money paid out for wheat and other grains here and it would make quite a difference in our annual income. Such a house levys tribute on every place to which the butter and eggs are shipped, Boston, New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Tacoma and in fact every important point on the continent all would pay tribute to Polk County. All that we lack to become one of the richest countries on the globe is simply a good reliable market for our products; we can produce the products in abundance. This project was only considered feasible after the arrival of the Duluth, Crookston & Northern which furnishes us an outlet via the Northern Pacific railroad to points not yet reached by the Manitoba. The enterprise should be heartily encouraged by our citizens and it should not be a hard matter to get the money necessary to secure it.

JUST A SAMPLE.

A Considerate Examination

Of One of the Roads That "Don't Pay Expenses."

The Great West.

In a recent issue we asked for information concerning the Brown's Valley R. R. The Inter-Lake Tribune responds as follows, and we will add a few notes regarding the attached fraud known as the Little Falls & Dakota:

"We want a statement, from some Alliance friend of Traverse county, about the Brown's Valley branch railroad. The facts are said to have an interest both touching and sublime. Who will write us?"—[The Great West.

The Great West is a new publication at St. Paul, with Dr. Fish, formerly of the Glenwood Minnesotian, as editor. It is the official organ of the state farmers' alliance, and is waging a vigorous war against railroads and other combinations. The Great West asks for a statement about the Brown's Valley branch railroad. Without going into details, we would venture to say that the click-it-aclack branch of the Manitoba railroad known as the Brown's Valley line, is about the poorest excuse for a railroad of any line in the northwest. Many of the ties are rotten, and the rails are old worn out iron that was used in the vicinity of St. Cloud in '69, not long after the civil war. During the summer and fall the amount of traffic on this branch is something wonderful compared to the train service. One mixed train per day is all that is run, but the employes on this train are often compelled to work until nearly midnight to handle the freight, and the road is only 48 miles in length. Does it pay the company, you ask? Well, we should smile! All well informed railroad men acknowledge that this click-it-aclack branch pays nearly double the amount the same number of miles of railway operated in the state. The amount of freight handled by this branch, to say nothing of the passenger traffic, is simply wonderful, while the expense of its operation is a mere trifle.

But perhaps Bro. Fish had some reference as to the ownership of this branch when he asked for a statement. It is a well-known fact that the Manitoba company only claims to hold a lease of this branch and that the Northern Pacific claims to have purchased the same as an extension of their branch, the Little Falls & Dakota. Under its charter, the Little Falls & Dakota was compelled to build to Dakota, but it never built further than Morris and then made the sham purchase of this branch from Morris to the Dakota line from the Manitoba company. The Little Falls & Dakota was given a land grant of six sections to the mile. It has obtained these lands although it has never fulfilled its part of the contract with the state. It was a daring steal—nothing short of "highway" robbery. It is to be hoped that the matter will some day be investigated, and the Little Falls & Dakota be compelled to complete their road to the state line or forfeit their big land grant.

The Brown's Valley railroad is a line which stretches from Morris, in Stevens County, to Brown's Valley, in Traverse County, on the Dakota line, near the junction of two lakes or enlargements of the Red River, a distance of 46 miles. It lies in Stevens, Big Stone and (slightly) Traverse Counties, and is a "continuation" of the Little Falls & Dakota. And in that word "continuation" lies an enormous fraud. The L. F. & D. is a road 78 miles in length, in Morrison, Todd, Stearns, Pope and Stevens Counties. It was built on stock and bonds by the "wheel within a 'wheel" process. That is, the "Company" was organized within the Northern Pacific Company. And when built it was leased to the Northern Pacific on such terms that if the bonds were paid by the N. P. the "stock" (that is, the road itself,) should become the "absolute property" of the main line. That is a very simple matter. When the debt to themselves, at three times its real amount, was paid to themselves, the STOCK was to come to themselves! That was a snap, because the TRAFFIC was to pay the debt to themselves.

Now, the charter entitled them to certion lands when the road was built to the Dakota line, and the land itself would be, and was then, worth a trifle over THREE TIMES the cost of the road—the road bed and attachments, we mean, for the "road" don't own rolling stock to the amount of one wheelbarrow.

In organizing, the seven men, most of whom were officially in the N. P. Directorate, issued $1,560,207.50 of stock, "on account of construction," though only such receipts therefor were used for construction as came from stock-takers of the "outside" variety. The next step was to issue $1,757,000 in mortgages, (bonds). These they took up themselves, probably, at about 25 cents on the dollar. To this they added about $250,000 of "bonus.". They turned in the Northern Pacific advantages in the way of building, and invested about $450,000 to build the road. Their debit account stands this way, (receipts):

Stock	$1,460,207
Bonds (guaranteed)	1,757,000
Bonuses	250,000
Land, 334,000 acres at $6 an acre, and you can't buy them for that	1,670,000
Total	$5,137,207
Credit to expense	450,000
Balance on the steal	$4,687,207

The road has not earned an acre of land, and here came in the Brown's Valley R. R. connection. When the L. F. & D. reached Morris it "combined" on a scheme with J. J. Hill, or the Manitoba control, and appeared to take possession for a period of the Brown's Valley line. This was given out as a purchase. No purchase ever took place. No lease ever took place. We say straight from the shoulder that the L. F. & D. Ry never had the Brown's Valley line

IN ITS POSSESSION FOR ONE HOUR.

It does not own it. It does not lease it. It never did own it. It was a dirty, scurvy, scoundrelly trick to beat the state out of land—and if the legislature of 1889 had had the heart of a bloodless worm it would have investigated the matter—for facts had been published. The figures as given above and to follow had been published by us over and over.

Now, this road is listed as a nonpaying branch! A lying pamphlet issued by H. P. Robinson, has this branch scheduled as a on the main lines, to make up his estimates. Let us see.

What the expenses of the road are now, with two mixed trains a day, (one each way) we do not know exactly. But on its run of one train we can give the exact figures. Every Saturday night there accrues as interest on the bonds of one of the five counties the sum of

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS.

That one hundred dollars paid the total expenses of operating that train, beginning with the headlight oil, labor account, coal, the station agent at the county seat, and ending with the "waste" in the boxes! There was a balance of 50c. left in the till—after "running the road"—every Saturday night! Now, the interest on the other bonuses would take care of the other train, and leave a large surplus.

So you see the road don't cost the Northern Pacific one cent to operate! Not a cent! Not a stiver. Pope County runs most of it for the benefit of the poor Northern Pacific! The other counties bear a hand, too.

Now, what are the receipts?

The books of the L. F. & D. Railway Co. show receipts of from $1,600 to $2,000 a week! What are these receipts? They should be profit—every dollar of them! The only possible exception may be the wear and tear on 15 and 25 box cars, 20 to 30 flats, two coaches, two baggage cars and the engine in use—and a few straggling section men. But their telegraph, mail and express business, not counted above, will balance every item unprovided for. This and the Brown's Valley road are two of these dreadful "Branch barnacles."

A Big Sacrifice.

CROOKSTON, MINN., NOV. 21 1889.

Rascally Combination.

Western Rural.

The Western Rural has published the details of sufficient conspiracy during the last few years, against the people's rights, to arouse almost any people on earth into an excitement that would lead to a united effort to defeat the objects of the conspirators. This is The Rural's purpose in keeping before the public the constantly moving panorama of fraud and villainy. It is of no use to give pulicity to such things, except as a means of agitation. The men who make it a business to plunder farmers are tireless in their efforts and seemingly exhaustless in resources. It sometimes appears as if every new move on the part of these classes was more impudent and shameless than any that had preceded it. The railroad monopoly is especially active in its efforts to swindle the public. Before the Inter-State Commerce Law was enacted, the impositions of this monopoly were of the most audacious character. Since that law went into force, the greed of railroad corporations has been somewhat muzzled, and the corporations have been as restless as a fish out of water, as a consequence. Not long ago we referred to an attempt upon the part of certain people in Wall street to organize a railroad trust; and the thing is about to materialize. Gould and Huntington are conspicuous in the deal. The peculiar character of this combination will be manifest when the fact is known that the Southern Pacific road, which has a sort of blanket charter, is the backbone of the combination. The Southern Pacific is a Kentucky corporation, and its charter confers upon the corporation the right—mark the outrageous character of it—"to buy, hold, sell and deal in all kinds of public and private stocks, bonds and securities." That will make the concern in the hands of Gould and Huntington the very dirtiest of Wall street gambling enterprises. It can water its own stock to the highest extent of these men's greed. Then they propose to gobble the following roads:

	Miles.
Wabash railroad	948
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul	5,678
Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe	7,706
Denver & Rio Grande	1,466
Denver & Rio Grand Western	373
Missouri Pacific	4,994
Sourthern Pacific	5,931
Total	27,096

One of our dailies says that this tremendous combination could dominate nearly all traffic between Chicago and the Pacific coast and wipe out competition and establish monopoly rates at thousands of points in the West. Such a proposed concentration of monopolistic power may well excite public apprehension, as it will certainly alarm the railroads inside the territory covered, but which are not parties to the scheme. The body of the Southern Pacific octopus stretches from Louisiana to California, but its suckers extend through the West and Northwest and inclose the lines which are feeders and outlets of the Union Pacific. The St. Paul adjunct interlaces with its great system the Northwestern, the Burlington and Rock Island. The St. Paul, by means of the Missouri Pacific at Kansas City and the Denver & Rio Grande in Colorado, is to get a direct connection with the Central Pacific (Huntington-Stanford line) at Ogden. These are ominous arrangements for the Union Pacific and for the Chicago roads which connect with it at the Missouri River or have lines of their own to Colorado. Will they dare to compete for transcontinental business against the Huntington-Gould trust when the latter, by virtue of its control of the St. Paul system can make them bleed at every competing station in the Northwest and demoralize both their through and local business? Powerful as the Northwestern, the Burlington, and the Rock Island are, it would seem that the Southern Pacific octopus is slipping its suckers under, over and around them, and a desperate effort will be needed to get free. The managers of these lines will not be reassured by the circumstance that Traffic Manager J. C. Stubbs of the Southern Pacific has been transferred from that position to the First Vice Presidency of the St. Paul. Mr. Stubbs bears the reputation of "an intrepid fighter," and he is already assigned to the field where the trust threatens to wage war.

Will the roads which have so far refused to join the trust combination still undertake to stand out? asks the daily paper from which we have quoted. The Rural thinks it can answer that question. They will not. Sooner or later the fond dream of the railroad conspirators, to mass all railroads under one management will be realized, if the Gould-Huntington scheme is perfected; and when it is we may look out for worse treatment at the hands of railroads than we have ever experienced Under such a combination they will swindle us in rates and swindle us in stock transactions. People of America, the tyranny of greed is encompassing you very rapidly, and there is nothing that can save you but your own power as independent men who will stand solidly at the ballot box and vote for your own interests. It is either ruin or a union of your forces. Which shall it be?

The Good Boards of Trade.

The Western Rural.

At a recent gathering of farmers in St. Louis a Chicago man had the effrontery to present the Chicago Board of Trade as a friend and benefactor to the farmer. His theory was that the gambling on the board raised prices and hence the farmer was benefitted. Well, how much did the wheat growers of the country make when "Old Hutch" was ostensibly selling wheat for two dollars a bushel? He was getting two dollars a bushel for wheat because he had practically cornered all the wheat in market, and the gamblers who had agreed to sell this same Old Hutch wheat on a certain day, could not buy any wheat except they bought it of him; and as a matter of fact he himself did not have a quarter of the wheat that was demanded to sell. But that was not necessary. All the debtor had to do was to pay the old man what he asked for wheat. Suppose all the wheat growers had dumped all the wheat that was needed to square up that notorious wheat deal into the Chicago market, is any one foolish enough to suppose that the price would have remained at two dollars? Not by a jug full. If the wheat had come in prices would have gone down, "Old Hutch" would have been pinched, and the other fellows would have made the money. Board of Trade gambling unsettles prices. No benefit was ever derived yet from gambling enterprises and no benefit ever will be derived from them. Whenever the Board of Trade gambler can be squelched the farmer's interests will be safer; and we believe that the time will come when gambling in futures will be stopped. Congress considered the matter at the last session, but concluded that it had no power to legislate. The fact that it considered the matter, however, was a matter of encouragement, as showing that legislators have come to see the evil in its proper light.

Our Practice With Swine.

The Western Rural.

In a recent issue we promised to give the reason for the faith that is within us as relates to our practice of keeping swine until the second year, though we have stated it so often that it may be monotonous to some of our readers. It is always to be remembered, however, that The Rural and Stockman is constantly having new readers who are not familiar with some of our theories and practices. We were not at all surprised recently to receive a communication from a subscriber in which he took issue with us upon this point. The practice of marketing the swine the first year has become very general, and is advocated as the most profitable practice. It is a part of the forcing method which The Rural and Stockman believes has been so detrimental to our swine interests. Our hogs are about as lacking in constitutional vigor as they can be, and make any pretense to warding off disease. We have been feeding corn as the main food for swine, until we have hogs with imperfect development of bone and muscle, and without a perfect development of these the animal is practically in a diseased condition all the time. It is born in that condition, and instead of attempting to repair the injury that has been done the pig through an improper management of its ancestry, we set to work at once to build a mountain of fat upon this imperfectly developed frame. Further than this as a part of our method of haste, we breed from stock that is too young, and the result has been that disease has swept our herds and lost us millions of dollars.

Our practice in swine husbandry is based first upon the development of bone and muscle, which are the basis of health and vigor. We like to breed from well developed dams and sires, and you cannot do that unless you make an effort to develop them. Selecting such dams and sires, we proceed with our method. The pigs come. While with the sow they are eating their little heads off. She must have the most expensive foods, and feed her bountifully with these, as we recently said, she will lose one hundred pounds which represent the loss of just so much money. But when the pigs are by the suckling period, they are by the most expensive period of their lives. From that time until the fattening period begins it is not very expensive to keep them. Their food will consist largely of the bone and muscle forming varieties with a little corn meal. Grass will be the mainstay in summer. Clover hay will be largely fed in winter, together with the cheapest bone and muscle forming foods that can be got. Better by far feed oats to growing hogs then sell them at present prices. Usually bran can be had at such prices as that it will be a cheap food. While on grass the cost is inconsiderable. It costs something to pasture hogs, of course, but it is a cost that is not felt.

When the second Autumn comes the appearance of the swine is an unanswerable argument against the charge that the method is costly. They are tough looking brutes certainly. Anybody would be willing to say that their appearance indicated that it had cost comparatively little to raise these hogs; and they would be quite as willing to say that they were as tough as an old razorback. It is not unlikely, too, that one who should see such swine for the first time would declare that such swine could hardly be fattened. "You have bone and muscle, and that is all you have got," a man once remarked when he saw such swine. Well that was all that was wanted at that time. But such hogs will astonish you when you begin to feed corn. They will round out quickly and when they are ready for market they will weigh just about double what your first year hogs will weigh. You will have in this one litter just about as many pounds of pork as your neighbor, who turns off his hogs the first year, will have in two litters; and you will not only have stronger hogs and better pork, but you will escape the expensive feeding of the sow and her loss of flesh for one litter of pigs.

We sincerely believe that there is more money by our method than there is in the other. We have had years of experience in breeding and fattening hogs. About all the money we ever made on the farm we made with hogs, and we made it by following this method, and we made more than did those whom we knew to be following the other method. And now why not try it? It can be tried on as small a scale as you like, but tried thoroughly enough to test the value of the method. When a man tells us that he knows from long experience that a certain method is by all odds the best, we shall put the method to the test at least upon a small scale.

Northwestern Agriculturist: It does not pay to keep a cow for butter or cheese making, that will not increase her flow of milk with extra care or food. If the extra feed goes to fat she is not a dairy cow and will prove unprofitable She belongs on the beef side of the line and should go to the block early in life, before she has cost her owner money. But when a cow is found that generously responds in milk to extra feed, she is a born dairy cow, and the limit to her usefulness is her power of digestion and vitality. How much food can she digest and turn into milk without impairing her constitutional vigor is the question, and this can be ascertained only by careful feeding, until she has reached her limit and shows symptoms of being off her feed. Such a cow should be fed food rich in nitrogen. Slushy food increases flow of milk but impairs its quality, while quality is where the net profit is. A large flow of poor milk taxes the cow without giving any profitable returns.

American Resources Exhausted by the Use of Foreign Luxuries.

The Western Rural.

Statistics prove that the United States pays, as the difference against it in its trade relations with the Central and South American countries, the enormous sum of $100,000,000 per annum. This balance, of course, after furnishing what they want from us, must be paid in the precious metals. This drain becomes the more alarming when we take into account the character of the products we consume, which are in the line of the luxuries, coffee, sugar, tea and the tropical fruits.

A prominent coffee dealer who has been operating on the New York Coffee Exchange has retired from that institution on the ground that the option dealings and speculations so enhance the price of coffee artificially, that the people are being robbed out of about $30,000,000 a year more than is justified by the actual value of the product based upon supply and demand.

Adding to the above the balance of trade against us with European countries which has been the prevailing condition of our relations for several months, the present stringent condition of the money market may be accounted for.

While examining our relations with our foreign neighbors, we may well view them with alarm, in view of the fact that the entire surplus of our farms comes so far short of paying the balances against us that our immense mining resources of precious metal products are exhausted to make good the deficiency. Add to this the evils of the centralization of capital at home in the hands of trusts and combines, which are extorting from consumers who are paying tribute to produce profits to the middleman never before possible.

Will the wealth producers of this nation consent to be wholly sacrificed or will they so completely organize that by a concert of action they can, by practicing a little self denial along certain lines, beat the trust? The same co-operative measures might secure legislation punishing the conspirators against the rights of the people.

The Colt and the Horse.

Western Rural: From that colt you are to get the future horse. If you intend to build a horse you must get a foundation first. We saw men the other day putting great heavy timbers under the house of a friend of ours. We asked him what he intended to do, and he said that he found that the foundation was good for nothing, and that he must put a new one in. That is precisely the way some men attempt to "build" a horse. They neglect the foundation. They neglect to keep the bones and muscles growing; and we cannot put a new foundation under a horse, as a man can put one under his house. If the foundation of the horse is faulty, it will never be repaired. We have known colts that never got anything in the shape of grain but corn, and corn is no more fit for a colt as a steady diet than candy is for a child. The colt and all young animals should have sweet, tender hay and such grain as oats in winter. This sort of feeding will develop the system. The animal should not be kept in ill-ventilated stables, nor compelled to stand in manure, and the old and oft-repeated advice to begin "breaking" the colt early is always in order.

The German Dining Car.

It may surprise some of our readers to hear that the dining car has got a foothold in the Fatherland—but it has—somewhat. And this is how: You think it is nearing dinner time. In one end of the car is a small closet, in which sits a gruff person who sells you a ticket for dinner. The dining car is next to the engine. You can't walk through this train, as you do in America, there being no doors in the ends of the cars. When a station is reached where there is a stop, you get out and race along the platform for dear life till you can climb into the diner. A big joint is brought on in a large dish, vegetables accompanying. Bill—dinner 75 cents, wine 40 cents, waiter 10 cents, total $1.25. At another station you leap from the diner and rush back to your "compartment car." This is not the way we do in America. To discover the difference, take the vestibuled trains of "The Burlington" for Chicago, and eat a meal in one of their "Peerless" dining cars, price 75 cents. For tickets by this line, call on local ticket agent, or for information address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R. St. Paul, Minn.

Killed By the Cars.

Grand Forks Herald, Nov. 20.

Justice Brown, in the absence of Coroner Shepard, of Crookston, held an inquest at eleven o'clock this morning, at the city hall, East Grand Forks, to determine the cause of the death of Axtel Frederickson, who was killed last evening in the N. P. freight yards on the east side. The testimony of the witnesses examined was substantially to the same effect as had been previously reported; that deceased was crushed to death between two cars. Frederickson, in company with Thomas Kelly, car repairer, was examining the cars of a train that had just come in. In doing this Frederickson stepped between two cars, one of which proved to have a broken bumper. Just then the switch engine shunted a car against the train, moving the car next to Frederickson. The bumper gave way, leaving the unfortunate man without protection. His death was instantaneous, as Kelly found him dead a few minutes after the cars were moved. The remains were removed from the east side station to the undertaking rooms of McDonald & Gallop this afternoon. A brother of the deceased will arrive from Brainerd tomorrow morning, when arrangements for the funeral will be made.

BURNED THE BONDS.

RAILROAD RE-ADJUSTMENT BONDS GO UP IN SMOKE.

St. Paul News, Nov. 20.

The bonds which for the nonce united Gov. Merriam, Auditor Braden and Treasurer Bobleter were burned forever this morning. The event was of short duration, but full of pathetic incidents; and revealed the innate distrust of man toward his fellow man. The details of the occasion and the circumstances leading to it are as follows: Somewhere in the seventies some blank bonds were printed, known as re-adjustment bonds, to be issued in lieu of the old railroad bonds. They were of the denomination of $1,000 each, and all that was necessary to make them effective was the proper signature, everything else being printed. All these blanks were disposed of but sixteen. These sixteen have been secreted in a vault all this time lest some one might forge an official signature and float them, as was done in Tennessee recently. This morning the governor, auditor and treasurer, every one of whom was afraid of the other, had a secret meeting to agree if possible upon some new disposition of these precarious blanks. No proposition that any one could make was consented to by the other two, and one was afraid to trust the other with their custody. As a compromise they agreed to burn them and arranged a program of cremation.

When all was ready the three took the bonds and started in military order for the engine house. Col. Bobleter, whose military experience fitted him for the position, marched on the left and gave the command, holding on to the blanks with his right hand. Auditor Braden was on the right, and held on to the blanks with his left hand. A tribute was paid to Gov. Merriam's high office by allowing him the middle place, and true to his proclivities, he put a death grip on the papers with both hands. They walked out Molly McGuire fashion, and after three "heaves" in stentorian tones by the gallant colonel, the blanks went, Daniel like, into the fiery furnace on the word "Ho!" They then held up their hands in silence until the last traces disappeared, when, at the word of command, they marched back to their respective quarters. It is safe to say that those bonds are as strong as any which ever united the three, but they were destroyed when the barriers were burned away.

In Favor of Pure-Breds.

C. E. Rumsey, in Prairie Farmer.

I am not breeding grades, but am trying to breed and select thoroughbreds that will reduce the number of eaters that produce a given quantity of milk. Now, one word about grades: They are for a poor man, who cannot put in capital at the beginning. I do not think it the best way for a man who has any capital to lose time, and time is money. I never call a native cow a "scrub." A farmer knows that many of them are profitable, and an insult does not help him to buy blooded cattle. I have tried natives and grades, paying good prices, and giving best treatment, to try to beat pure-breds. If I can make more money out of $50 cows than out of $300 cows, I am going to make the smaller investment; but I cannot do it. I have lost money feeding and milking $35 cows, and made money on $300 cows. I have the earnings of every cow every month, and know what I am writing. I have made some money on $35 cows, but enough more on pure-breds to make me willing to pay the high prices.

But you must not go on pedigrees alone. Pedigrees, without performance, will leave you "in the soup;" but performance, backed up by pedigrees, will pull you out and dry you off.

It costs me as much to raise natives as it does thoroughbreds. Will any farmer say he would rather have them at the same price? You know he lies if he says so, $2,400 invested in 12 cows looks large, but in two years they have given me 12 heifers. $2,400 invested in 24 pure-bred Holsteins looks smaller. The rest of it is in the future, but I am holding every heifer I own, to prove to myself and others, by an object lesson that can't be overlooked, that it pays to start with pure-bred cattle, if you can pay for them or your credit is good. It is reasonable to suppose that I will have 12 heifers from the 24 females inside another year or two; $2,400 invested in 26 pure Holsteins is getting to farmers' prices and by the end of the fifth year where will the price go to per head?

I say nothing of bull calves. I am writing from a dairyman's standpoint, not a breeder's. Any way the Holstein Association adds $5 for every one vealed or castrated this year. That will help a dairyman. I have sold mine when four weeks old for $25 to $30, and when a few months old, at $50 to $70. I sold one this week for $50, four months old, and three parties desired one that I advertised for $30, four weeks old.

I will book their orders for "future delivery." Now, the bull-calf argument I do not use, but repeat, that if you start with pure-breds and keep every heifer for five years, you will beat completely the man who starts with natives and grades up. I tried it far enough to know; it is a business matter. I get more for milk than farmers usually get—13½ cents per gallon the year round; but the lower price you get, the more milk you need, and you get it with pure-breds, if you know how to buy and breed.

If you are trying to get the cheapest thing you can buy that is registered, you must not say that I led you astray. A man must be as careful in buying pure-bred stock, as natives. You must pay the price a good one will bring, and not buy poor ones, even though they are as cheap as natives. I bought good ones, and did not get a cow in the lot that did not prove a profit in milk alone. I can't do that with natives; perhaps others can, but I doubt it. I have fed three cows exactly the same feed. One put the feed in the milk pail; one put it on her own back, and the third did neither—simply lived on the other two and put my feed into the manure pile. The one who put it on her back was not much more profitable. I can't compete with the "Big Four" on beef. I can only say in conclusion: Hunt the poor milkers with the scale. It does not take one minute per cow. Write it on a slate, chalk it on a blackboard, or pencil it on paper. I am not selling scales, but scales can be got that will allow for weight of pail. Make all pails weigh the same by adding solder, and the scales will point to exact points. Do it every night and morning, if you want to know it all. You find out something by weighing once a week. The boys will get interested, and the cow you think the best one the first six months, will sometimes be beaten by one you expected to butcher. The dairy is a business. Feeding up large amounts of costly feed, do you know what you get and which cow earns it, unless you weigh milk daily?

A great reduction in subscription rates is announced by the publishers of The Breeder's Gazette. This beautifully printed and handsomely illustrated periodical is so generally conceded to stand at the head of all papers of its class that we need only say that it is regarded as an absolute necessity by all who are making a study of the breeding, feeding and management of any description of live stock. It has heretofore cost $3 per year, but can now be had, under a special offer just announced, at $2 for single subscriptions, and at $1.50 where five names or more are obtained. Send for sample copy and terms and list of prizes to agents, to the publishers, the J. H. Sanders Pub. Co., 226 La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill.

C. H. SAAKE,

ROBERT STREET CROOKSTON.

Relative Value of the Jersey and Holstein.

Working slowly for some years to establish a herd of cows for a butter dairy, a correspondent of the American Farmer writes: "I have now 10, all of my own rearing and all promising superior excellence. I began with Jerseys a dozen years ago, and four years ago with Holsteins, using in each case a good selected native cow and a thoroughbred bull. I have reached the sixth cross of the Jerseys, have sold three or four cows, and have six of the decendents of the old mother cow, and my heifers all now have the appearance of full-blood Jerseys; and although I have only the third cross of the Holsteins, the same is true of them. I have not a cow whose milk shows less than 15 per cent. of cream, but I find the milk of the Jerseys is of richer color than that of the Holsteins. I have been milking graded Jerseys for 10 years, and am so well satisfied with them that, if my object was to make butter only, and I wished to stock my farm to its full capacity with cows, I should look no further, but there are so many farmers who wish to raise all their calves and to produce beef as well as butter that I wish to try both breeds. There is no use in denying that the male calves of the Jerseys are not worth the raising, and I shall never raise another. Not only are they undersized, but they are also unsaleble; the butchers object to them because their meat is yellow, as well as because they are small. On the other hand I have never seen more growthy cattle than the Holsteins. I owned some excellent thoroughbred Shorthorns, but they did not grow faster or develop younger than do the Holsteins I now have. They did, however, make smoother cattle, and would probably sell better in a city market for beef, but, on the other hand I have never had Shorthorns that were as good dairy cows as the Holsteins, and, notwithstanding the ridicule that is heaped on the term "general-purpose" cow, I believe that we have it in the Holstein.

SENATOR WASHBURN RETURNS.

HE TALKS OF THE TRANSFER OF THE FLOUR MILLS TO THE ENGLISH SYNDICATE.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 21.—Senator W. D. Washburn, looking the very picture of health, reached Minneapolis this morning after a four months' trip on the continent. When asked what will be the effect of the mill deal, he said: "It will be a boom to every business man in Minneapolis. It will bring to this city new capital which will act like an infusion of new blood into the veins of an ailing man. But by that I do not wish to say that local capital is not healthy—far from it—but I do think we had about all the local capital invested which we could command."

Commenting on the subject of his deposition from the presidency of the Soo road, the senator said: "Before I left Minneapolis I had made up my mind and told the directors of the road that I would not be able to serve as the head of the Soo another year and gave them as my reasons that I had already more to do than I could attend to; also that I did not think it was conformable to the proprieties for the head of a great railroad to have a seat in the United States senate."

Senator Washburn then briefly referred to the legislation which would come up in congress this term, saying that he fancied the appropriation for the Soo canal would be the most important point of interest to residents of the Northwest. He was asked if he had heard that complaints had been made that the new Minneapolis postoffice was not large enough to accommodate the public and said: "It is large enough for all practical purposes for ten years to come. You must remember that when the appropriation for that postoffice was made no one fancied that Minneapolis would be a town of 200,000 inhabitants."

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U. S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as follows:

Each year on his insurance.......$88 44
Each year on his loan for interest.......80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years.........1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest.......$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of.......500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years.......1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest.......$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years..... 1000 00

Total.......$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

Capt. H. W. Donaldson, of Kittson County, dropped in to our den to chat with us when in the city last week, and reviewed the wheat situation with us. He is of the opinion that the producer does not get a fair deal by the system of State inspection now in vogue, and thinks there should be a change. He is of the opinion that a much larger yield could be had from our lands with proper methods used. He is a firm believer in the roller and is getting up one that will weigh, all complete, 5,000 lbs., so constructed as to leave a rough surface. He will put in the grain with drill, following with the mammoth roller, then the work is done. The land is left so that it will not drift in high winds. He thinks sheep on summer fallow an excellent thing, as their little feet pack and firm the soil, and the more solid our land can be made the better for wheat. It is impossible to get it too solid. Then the sheep are very profitable for other considerations and every farmer should have a few, as they are the most profitable stock that can be raised. Mr. D. tried a patch of millet last summer. On 2½ acres of ground he raised 90 bushels of seed. The grass stood 3½ feet high and he thinks would have turned between four and five tons per acre had it been cut for hay. He cut it with the self-binder and utilizes the straw for feed. Stock eat it greedily and do well on it. He has also experimented with alfalfa and thinks it would do well here. Anent the wheat question, Mr. D. says he thinks of buying or renting an elevator and will ship his own wheat and his neighbors who wish it.

Fertile Journal: Telegraphic communication will soon be established between Fertile and Crookston. Several car loads of material have arrived and a crew of men are now at work.

Grand Forks Herald: Chas. E. VanArsdale, of Crookston, has accepted a position with Burke Corbet here as stenographer and typewriter. We welcome Mr. V. and congratulate Burke on his continually increasing business.

We have filled the building adjoining our store with all kinds of Second Hand Household Goods and will pay the highest cash price for second hand goods.

Holmboe & Larson have decided to dissolve partnership and quit the mercantile business for awhile, at least. With this object in view they offer to dispose of their entire stock within the next thirty days without regard to cost. Go and buy at your own figures.

$100,000 to loan.
JOHN MCLEAN.

Do you observe Hans Peterson's new ad? Call and see what he can do for you in the line of holiday goods. He has dead loads of 'em and has had to get in a large new show case in which to store 'em for a few days until sold. Call early for bargains.

The Crookston Choral Club, under the able leadership of Prof. Brewer, gave a pleasant entertainment at the Opera House on Thursday evening last. Where all did so well to praise a few would be injustice to the rest. We trust the Club will give our citizens another treat in the near future.

Herman Enterprise: Gov. Merriam has taken a great interest in the matter and says that if farmers fail to get cars when they order them, to ship wheat, they have only to let him know and he will give the matter his personal attention and will make things blue until the cars are forthcoming.

To people needing winter underwear, we would say call on us before purchasing and we will save you considerable hard cash.
C. O. D. CLOTHING HOUSE.

The St. Paul Daily News is one of the best, if not the very best, of St. Paul's excellent evening papers. JOURNAL readers now have an opportunity to secure it for a song. For all of our subscribers who are in arrears and who pay up said arrearages and one year in advance we will send the St. Paul Daily News and THE JOURNAL for $2.50. Now is your time.

Good Union cassamere overcoats at $3.50, $4.00, $4.50 and $5.00, at the C. O. D. Clothing House.

Peter Lorge was in from Fertile on Monday and dropped in to see THE JOURNAL man and renew. By the way, many have been doing that same during this month and yet there is room for more. THE JOURNAL would like to visit every home in the county during the coming year and offers great inducements for new subscribers and for renewals. Call and see us, everybody, and see what we can do for you.

Do not wait until too late but call now for bargains before my stock is all sold. Only a short time remains to secure goods at present prices.
A. G. GALLASCH.

A. Grindeland was down from Warren spending the Sunday with Dave Hatlestad and friends in the city. He is holding down the office of Judge of Probate of Marshall County with dignity and grace, and has recently welcomed a 11 pound boy who adds the weight of his influence also. Dave Hatlestad says he has a bit of a conundrum, built it himself, i. e., "if that boy weighed 11 pounds when he was no year old, how much will he weigh when of age?"

We carry a full line of coffins, caskets, robes, and will fill telegraph orders promptly at one-half usual price.
CROOKSTON FURNITURE CO.

The Aamold Concert Company gave an entertainment in the Opera House on Saturday evening to a good house. Herr Aug. Aamold is a Norwegian, a young man of great promise who bids fair to rival the great Ole Bull. Miss Ellen Beach Yaw is a native of New York. Her voice is remarkably clear and sweet and it seems no effort at all for her to execute the most difficult pieces. Miss Beals is a Boston girl. The only fault we have to find with her recitations is that she talks rather low and indistinct. She is, however, a clever artist. Chr. Rodenkirchen is a wonderful performer on the cornet—the best we ever listened to. Each was encored to the letter, and gracefully responded as often as called out. We never heard "Comin' Thro' the Rye" more sweetly rendered than it was by Miss Yaw in response to a recall by the audience after the famous "Echo Song." The audience was well pleased and should this company ever return they will no doubt draw a crowded house.

for one year for only two dollars and fifty cents! This offer holds good until January 1st, 1890.

Henry Steege came up from Duluth this week.

Hans Thompson was up from Fisher on Saturday.

Some hay on the streets. Selling at from $5 to $7 per ton.

P. C. Schmidt went to St. Paul on the elated train Thursday night.

The ladies are invited to call at Mrs. E. E. Bangs' fashionable millinery parlors on Second street.

Henry Peterson came down from Fosston last Thursday remaining till Saturday's train.

Have you seen Mrs. E. E. Bangs' cosy millinery parlors? It is worth the while to go just to see how nicely she has everything arranged, as well as what nice goods she has to arrange.

We have a few choice Holstein heifers and cows for sale yet at prices to suit the times. No money required until the fall of 1890.

Louis Locken, Martin Christianson and several others left for Seattle on Monday evening via the D., C. & N. and the Northern Pacific.

John Quisnel, of Tilden was brought before Judge Spendley this week charged with assault with intent to commit rape and sent to the bastile to await trial.

A Thanksgiving ball will be given at McKinnon's hall Thursday eve. Nov. 28th in honor of Miss Josephine Sletten, who has been visiting friends in the city during the past month.

By special request the Crookston Choral Society will repeat their concert on Tuesday evening of next week for the benefit of the poor of our city. Admission only twenty-five cents. There should be a large turnout.

J. L. Bailey moved from the Fifth ward last week to Dan McKinnon's restaurant building on Main street where Mrs. B. and her daughter will conduct their millinery business in the future. They invite our lady readers to call and inspect their choice stock.

We are gratified by the way our friends are coming to the front with the subscriptions—both new and old and we wish right here to thank them one and all. Let the good work go on until THE JOURNAL becomes a regular visitor to every household in the county.

Ladies call at the new millinery shop on Main Street. Dan McKinnon's old restaurant building.

A meeting of our citizens was held in the office of Miller, Foote & Sweat on Wednesday evening of last week to consider Mr. Rickett's proposition to build a large hotel. He offers to build a large hotel if our people will guarantee 10 per. cent on the investment. This was considered to be rather too much of an undertaking, and, as it was said that a hotel could be secured upon more favorable terms a committee, consisting of E. D. Childs, P. C. Schmidt and John Cromb was appointed to look the matter up.

Last week a man calling himself H. D. McManus went to private residences in the city claiming to be an agent in the employ of the government to number houses preparatory to the free delivery system. Complaint being made he was interviewed by the police and failing to show any authority for his actions he was ordered to quit the business of "numbering" and bleeding our citizens. This week he operated on Sampson's Addition, getting the last 25 cents one woman had and giving her in return therefor a little tin tag with 511 thereon. Tuesday night he was arrested on complaint of mine host LeDuc of the Montreal House, on charge of larceny of a pair of shoes and taken before his Honor, Judge Spendley, who in default of bail committed him to the county jail for trial on Friday.

A Missing Boy.

On Tuesday evening's train Mrs. John Zeigler and her daughter came down to inform Mr. Zeigler, who is working for McKinnon Bros., that their oldest son Edgar has been missing since Tuesday, November 19th. On that day about noon he put on his skates and went on the lake to skate, while Minor Rood, for whom he was at work prepared dinner. As he did not return when dinner was ready Mr. Rood says he went to the lake shore and seeing nothing of him concluded he had gone home and so thought nothing of it. On the following Saturday he was at the home of the boy's parents and there learned that the boy had not been home. A search resulted in finding nothing but an air hole, but whether the boy skated into it or not is but conjecture as the snow had obliterated his tracks but the worst is feared, as there could have been no motive for such a long absence and he had not taken his over coat and mittens which would indicate that he did not intend to be gone long. Mr. Wyatt went out Wednesday morning to drag the lake as far as possible and up to the hour of going to press no word has been received from them.

POLK COUNTY JOURNAL: Will Peterson has a fine large white owl which his brother Henry sent him from Fosston. The bird was president of the owl club there and breaks up the club, Al. Kaiser being now the sole remaining member.

Thirteen Towns: Does Bro. Cooke mean that the white owl is an emblem of purity and that we are the only one left whom the snow white mantle covers or does he mean that we, like the owls in general, are noted for our wisdom? Arise Brother Cooke and explain and relieve the anxiety of a suffering and agitated community.

'Ow'l we go to work to explain if you don't know? We wonder that you should thus rashly expose the secrets of the club to the uninitiated. Of course all members know that's it and as for others—let them join and find out.

District Court convenes next Monday.

Dennis and Jim Kelley came down from Sletten on Tuesday's train.

When in court next week go and try one of the creamery man's square meals. Fulton knows how to keep hotel.

Herb Mason put in a neat new show case on Tuesday in which to store a fine line of plush goods. Look out for them.

Wm. Box Jr., was down from the ranch this week. Says the present is no time to sell stock and they have none for sale as yet.

On Tuesday Jailor H. N. Tweten went out to Kertsonville after Isak Solibakken who was sent up for thirty days from Justice Williams' court.

D. E. Hatlestad: I notice that McKinnon Bros. seem to have less litigation and less chattel mortgage sales than most any machinery firm I know of.

On Sunday November 24th Mrs. R. Kelley, of McKenna, N. D., a guest at the Germania house, gave birth to a female child. Mother and child doing nicely.

A large meeting was held at the city hall on Tuesday evening. A resolution asking that the Red Lake Indian Reservation be attached to the Crookston Land District was passed unanimously.

Mens suits, 2,000 complete suits to choose from. Come early and get the best selection.
C. O. D. CLOTHING HOUSE.

N. H. Fulton has rented the widow Pierce boarding house, corner of Broadway and Loring Avenue and is now prepared to accommodate guests in becoming style. He especially invites the attention of parties in attendance at the term of court to his house where they can find all of their accustomed home comforts at a nominal figure. Call and size him up.

THE JOURNAL acknowledges the receipt of the wedding cards of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Reynolds and hastens to send congratulations. Fred was once a Crookston boy and one of the independent kind who always make their way in life. If what they happen to fancy does not turn up just when they happen to want a job they catch onto whatever is offered; so it was with Fred one time in Crookston. He had just returned from law school and could find nothing but a job on the streets; so, instead of standing around sucking the nobby end of a bald-headed cane as many a young man would have done he tackled the street job until a better presented itself. He was always too independent to lay around idle when there was any thing at all to do and such material will always come to the front. He is now one of the leading lawyers of Duluth with a fine business.

In the project for building a house for a market for butter and eggs Crookston has an opportunity to secure an institution that will be worth thousands to her in providing a sure market for industries that heretofore have suffered a lack of facilities for handling. By securing it Crookston lays tribute to outside cities and villages and brings in a vast amount of money to be put in circulation here. And it will only require a small amount of encouragment to secure this institution.

A man named Helgeson arrived at the depot on Saturday morning and died a few minutes after being carried into the waiting room. His remains were taken to John Wyatt's undertaking rooms to await instructions from his relatives who are said to live at or near the Ovetia postoffice. Mr. Wyatt informs THE JOURNAL that Mr. Helgeson has been at St. Paul doctoring for consumption but becoming convinced that his case was hopeless concluded to come to Crookston to pass the remainder of his life near his friends where he could have good medical attendance. Up to Tuesday night no word had been received from his friends and Mr. Wyatt informed THE JOURNAL that the remains would be interred in the potter's field if not claimed soon.

The World on Wheels.

Slight Reductions in Passenger Rates Made by the Manitoba.

Pioneer Press: The Manitoba passenger department is preparing new tariffs, quoting slightly reduced rates from St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and points as far north as St. Cloud to Crookston and points beyond. The reduction is 20 cents, and is rendered necessary by the opening of the new line to Crookston. The Duluth, Crookston & Northern, in connection with the Northern Pacific, have the short line to Crookston, and as the state law prohibits charging more than three cents per mile the rates must be reduced to conform with that line's mileage.

Every One is Satisfied.

Pioneer Press: The daily reports received at the Manitoba's general offices have for the past six weeks been showing a handsome increase in the company's business. The movement of grain is particularly heavy, and the local traffic of the company is growing to large proportions. The passenger business is increasing at an enormous rate. So much so in fact as to tax the company to supply the necessary equipment. A general officer of the road said yesterday: "The Manitoba company is making more money now than it has ever done in the history of the company. A decided change for the better occured early in August, and since then the company's earnings have run much ahead of those for the corresponding time of last year. Not only has our traffic increased greatly, but we are having very few accidents, so that our receipts are not diminished on that score. Our property is in the best possible shape, and the country through which our lines run is in first-class condition. There has been sufficient rain everywhere and our farmers are satisfied that they will have an even more prosperous season next year than they have had this. Altogether the outlook could not possibly be more encouraging."

STUDYING THE TARIFF.

Congressman Hansbrough Figuring on How to Help Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Special to Pioneer Press, Nov. 22.—Congressman Hansbrough of North Dakota is making a study of the tariff on agricultural products. He had a new idea the other day and said to a Pioneer Press correspondent: "I have just discovered that 8,250,000 bushels of potatoes were imported into the United States in 1888, paying a duty of 15 cts. per bushel. I am figuring out a scheme whereby this importation of agricultural products may be checked so that the American farmer, with his unparalleled facilities for raising this class of produce, may supply the market instead of the foreign farmer. I am in favor of increasing the duty on potatoes to 30 cts. a bushel. That will help our Datota farmers."

The Wheat Market.

Douglas County News.

With each recurrence of the wheat marketing season comes the complaints of our farmers against wheat buyers and graders, sometimes as to dockage or grades and again as to price. This season complaints have been more numerous than usual chiefly directed at the "grade" fixed by buyers, to-wit: No. 1 Northern instead of No. 1 Hard, to which in reality the bulk of our very fine crop of this year no doubt belongs. The feeling that a wrong is being done is doubtless intensified by the low price that has ruled as well as the remembrances that only last year a very inferior quality of grain graded at the highest grade known to the law. It does not mend matters for the chief grain inspector, Mr. Clausen, to talk learnedly of the proportions of starch and gluten in the wheat this year, as farmers know very well that Scotch fife wheat, clean, dry and sound, and weighing sixty pounds to the measured bushel, should grade as No. 1 Hard if justice was done, and that it is in reality such is shown by the fact that our wheat graded as one Northern brought, when sold by sample in the Minneapolis market, but about one cent per bushel less than wheat that had passed state inspection as one Hard. We are not prepared to say what influences govern our state grain inspection business this year but evidently the farmers are suffering from it.

The system under which our grain is handled is far from perfect at best, and could by law be greatly improved, for if correct weights and grades are given by the local inspector a margin of five cents is generally taken by the handler and that is by far too heavy a tax to be paid on each bushel of our cheif product, and this, be it borne in mind, is the minimum price levied, much more being often taken. As to the remedy we would suggest that a number of farmers near each wheat station unite and build a warehouse and ship their own wheat themselves to large markets, thereby obtaining the best price for their product and at the same time, by so doing, compel the elevator companies to act fairly and for a reasonable compensation under pain of getting no business.

Do not forget the cheap excursion via the Manitoba railway to points in Canada, west of and including Montreal. Plan now for a delightful journey back to the scenes of early days. Apply to C. H. Mix, agent of the Manitoba Railway, at Crookston, Minn., or write to F. I. Whitney, Gen. Passenger and Ticket Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

CROOKSTON, MINN., NOV. 28 1889.

Notes on Red River Valley.

BY PROF. WILLET M. HAYS, UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA.

The Northwestern Farmer.

The student of practical agricultural subjects who pays his first visit to the Red River Valley region, and leaves the railway to look about and talk with the smaller and well-to-do farmers, as well as to visit the bonanza wheat farms, cannot fail to learn many lessons. To fully appreciate all the conditions of any section of country, county or even farm, one must reside there and "farm it." Though no large portion of Uncle Sam's domain has greater apparent sameness of soil etc., than the different parts of the valley proper of the Red River of the North, yet the conditions from north to south as modified by latitude and winds; and from east to west as modified by adjacent county, forests, etc., are in some respects dissimilar.

Despite the belief of resident farmers that the soils of this valley are full of the fertility needed in producing fine wheat, "to the depth of twenty feet," lands that have been repeatedly cropped to wheat are selling at considerably less per acre than the adjoining raw lands. This would not be true were summer fallowing more than a makeshift, enabling the wheat farmer to skin his land still more closely of its fertility. A temporary invasion of chinch bugs or other similar scourge to wheat, would be a terrible thing to those men not financially able to tide the time over. But like the burning of decaying frame buildings in a growing city, resulting in the erection of finer structures, it would shake farmers into better practices. People in a new rich country do not as a rule take up systems of farming, which preserves the strength of their lands, until natural fertility is so far exhausted that they are compelled to do so. It is exactly like working a horse without proper food until he is so weak, and poor and sick, that he can no longer earn his own feed, and then expend nearly as much in doctoring, feeding, and nursing him to health as he is worth.

This section of country must and will continue, more or less regularly, to make a large part of its money out of fine wheat. But wheat farming cannot stand alone, it is all work and no feed. It must have the dairy, stock raising, clover and all other self sustaining lines of co-operative agriculture to aid it. These will give rotation of crops which rest the land by change, thus preparing it for crops of wheat, manure that will renew the land, and and tame grasses that will give the soils time to become compact, which by constant cropping to wheat have become, in that climate, too loose and filled with undecayed stubble and weeds.

Agricultural writers, as with one voice, are advising farmers in all new sections of country to abandon wheat and take up other special lines or general or diversified farming. These writers, I believe, fail to appreciate the conditions in the country northwest of the Twin Cities. While raising wheat alone is no more rational, as a continuous practice, than raising cattle without also raising feed to keep them during the winter, wheat is one of the most, if not the most, profitable specialties of this section. This is true both because wheat does better and because some other things not so well, as in sections having a more temperate climate.

These writers all the time keep before the farmer's mind the total abandonment of wheat, and the adoption of dairying, horse raising or other lines of husbandry, and their advice applies well to many new sections further south. Men who have been paying mortgages on land, paying for expensive machinery, and high rates of interest by clearing one to fifteen or even more dollars per acre on wheat, are loth to lay aside wheat machinery, turn their granaries into stock barns and embark on something which requires a fresh outlay of capital, or the borrowing of more money, and is uncertain of even as great present returns as wheat will give even on lands somewhat worn.

The truer and better way to present the matter is to advise that these lines be taken up as aids to rational wheat farming as well as to bring in profits of themselves, and where the conditions for raising No. 1 hard wheat are so good as in this section of country, I believe that any line of farming will pay which furnishes rotation of crops and manure to aid in growing frequent crops of wheat, if it merely pays its own way in products in its own line. Thus if dairying will only yield enough to pay for cows, their feed, and a very reasonable amount for labor and incidental expenses, it will pay the wheat farmer on account of its assistance in putting the land in shape for wheat. The pastures of timothy clover or other plants, put the into fine condition for wheat by two years use as cow pastures. Meadows for winter hay, also prepare the land for wheat, especially if part or all clover is used. Even the land used for growing corn fodder, or corn ensilage, is better prepared for wheat. Then the manure composed of rich materials from the hay, bran, shorts, wheat screenings and other grain feeds, raised or purchased make the land rich for wheat. True these manures usually need to be applied to some other crop, as grass or corn before they are reduced enough for a crop of wheat, as raw manures make the wheat "go to straw and not to grain." Practically the same as is said concerning dairying, could be repeated about horse raising or sheep raising, and indeed other lines. But these side specialties will not merely pay their own way. They will produce good profits if intelligently managed. Most of these enterprises allow that the larger part of the time required for carrying them on is in winter, thus employing the farmer and hired men the year round. If men can be profitably employed in winter, they do not require so large wages in summer, and thus the burden of hired help is partially removed from the expences incident to putting in and handling the crop of grain.

Wheat will remain one of the leading interests in the Red River Valley and the country to the west for many years. The question is not how to leave off wheat farming for other lines, but rather how to have other lines help wheat farming, and at the same time yield profits of themselves. How to produce and manage tame grass sods? How can stock be fed most economically in winter? What annual forage crops are best to grow for stock? What grain feed is most economical to purchase to raise? What crop best prepares the land for wheat? are among the prominent questions for solution. The North Dakota Agricultural college and Experiment Station soon to be organized at Fargo, will be in an unworked field, in a section dissimilar to any other in the country. Not only are formal experiments to be performed, but even more important is the collection and digestion of the practical experience of the very many farmers who are experimenting in a practical, yet very costly manner.

Holstein-Friesian Register: A. & G. Rice, Curries, Ont., write: "We believe only four Holstein cows have records of over 30 lbs. in seven days, and only one of those has descendants in Canada. That one is Jewel, 668 HHB, record 31 lbs. 3¼ ozs. (One of our stock bulls, Jewel 3d Daisy Netherland, is a grandson of Jewel, who was never beaten in the show ring, though shown all over America, from 1883 to 1888.) She is nearly perfect as a dairy cow, scores 97 points out of a possible 100. The dam of Jewel 3d Daisy Netherland, is Jewel 3d. Mr. Whipple writes us: 'Jewel 3d was selected by a committee of experts to go to a New York experimental station to uphold the Holstein interests in competition with all other dairy breeds.' A very high honor, considering the many choice ones examined in New York, Pennsylvania and New England states. Jewel 3d's record, 2,887 lbs. of rich milk in 30 days, places her in the front ranks. She is by Mahomet, he by Aegis, 15 lbs. of whose milk made one lb. butter. On the sire's side of Jewel 3d Daisy Netherland, is to be found the cream of the Netherland family; space will only allow us to mention such names as Duke, Netherland, Lady Netherland, etc. We have also a fine bull, rich in the blood of the Netherlands, and the noted Promoter, whose name is Althea Promoter's Netherland. We have some choice young cows, one, Maid of Netherland, is, as the name implies, of the Netherland family. She is a very strong cow, of beautiful form, a First Prize winner at New York State Fairs, and a deep, continuous and rich milker. We have also Daisy Texal, a decendant of Lady Texal, with a butter record of 4 lbs. per day. Daisy Texal's two-year old record is 48¼ lbs. per day. This heifer whilst in quarantine last spring, only two years old, 13 months in milk on dry feed only, furnished milk and butter for superintendent and family, and he pronounces her a great butter cow. Daisy Texal dropped us a fine bull calf, which is sired by Pietertje 2d Holland King, whose service fee is $500 per cow. The Pietertje family have the highest records ever made, viz: Pietertje 2d, 30,318¼ lbs. in one year, average over 100 lbs. for 92 days. And the calves from this cow, viz: Pietertje 3d, Pietertje 4th and Pietertje 5th, have the largest milk and butter record ever made at two, three and four-year-olds, showing that 'like produces like.' Much more has and can be written about records made by blood relations of members of our herd, but this is sufficient to show that our stock want not for pedigree or performance.

More Money.

The Western Rural.

The Western Rural cannot be charged with ever having been an advocate of a reckless issue of money. It does not desire to have the country covered a foot thick with greenbacks or gold or silver dollars, and it does not believe that anybody else does. But as it has frequently said it does want a sufficient volume of money with which to do business. People cannot buy farm products or anything else, if they have no money to buy with. Labor cannot find profitable employment, if there is no money to remunerate it; and say what we will of other causes of the present depression of prices, one cause is the lack of a sufficient volume of the circulating medium. The talk of over-production is always largely humbug, though of course we do not deny that there is sometimes over-production. But what are we over-producing? Is there a surplus of wheat? Is not our wheat all consumed? Are there any hogs in the pen that are not needed for consumption? Indeed, while we have been acknowledging that we have had too many cattle in the country, every pound of meat that is sent to the market is consumed, is it not? Now is it a fact that our consumers are actually getting their flour and their meats and other articles of food for nearly nothing, because there is an over-production? No, it is not a fact. They are getting these things for something under proper cost, because there is insufficient money in circulation to enable them to buy all that they would buy otherwise, and hence prices are low. But there is a big profit made on all these things, and the Pillsburys and meat packers and carrying companies, and everybody else who handles farm products, after they leave the farm—especially in large quantities—are getting rich. They are gobbling all the profits there are, and there is some profit to somebody upon every bushel of grain that is growing and every meat producing animal that is sent to market.

In the speech of Mr. Allen which we recently published in the Alliance Department, he urged farmers to hold their surplus under certain conditions. If there is an over-production, there is no need of such advice. If there is an over-production there will be a surplus that must be held, and the simple fact that people are living economically and that yet there is a market for nearly all farm products, at some price, is proof enough that the cry of over-production is nonsense. When we had fifty dollars per capita in circulation wheat was worth two dollars per bushel. There was something to buy wheat with. The laborer got better wages. Financial matters were easy. But our circulation has been contracted until the creditor class has the whip hand of the debtor class, which is being driven to the wall rapidly under the financial jugglery of Wall street and the United States treasury.

MEATS AT RETAIL.

Break Down the Country Combines.

Farm, Stock and Home.

Farm, Stock and Home frequently receives complaints from its country correspondents about the high retail prices of meats in their local towns, and where the Beef Combine has no influence whatever. Local butchers go into the country, buy live animals at present prices, which are low beyond precedent, and put the meat on sale at prices so high as to be almost beyond precedent. The complaints refer, of course, to meats in a small way, steaks, roasts, etc., for immediate consumption. The mania for buying meats on foot at low prices and selling them when dressed at high prices has become epidemic, and every man, rich or poor, great or small, who engages in meat selling gets the disease quick and gets it bad. Every meat seller in the land seems to be hopelessly infected with the "Big Four" contagion, and from it our cattle interests are suffering most terribly.

That there is no necessity for the present condition we all know, and occasionally local butchers themselves "give the snap away" by contracting to furnish meats to consumers at prices somewhere near the bounds of reason. A recent contract made by a local butcher, living less than 100 miles from Minneapolis, with an out west hotel man is a case in point. The butcher contracts to supply beef and pork roasts and steaks of the very best quality, and all cuts trimmed and ready to go in the oven or on the broiler of hotel man, for seven cents a pound all around! Sausages are furnished at the same price. These meats are loaded in a refrigerator car, shipped seven hundred miles west (near where it is said our great competitors in beef-growing flourish,) and is laid down there for less than nine cents a pound. The hotel man pays from 15 to 18 cents for the same kind of meat when he buys from his local butchers, notwithstanding he is on the edge of the greatest beef producing region in the world.

The butcher who made the foregoing contract is well pleased with it, and confesses that it will pay him a handsome profit, what then must be the profit accruing from 12½ to 15 cents a pound for roasts and steaks? It surely seems within the power of the meat eaters in country towns and on adjacent farms to get meat at prices more in harmony with its price when on foot. Why not encourage competent men to establish meat routes in town and country, where (as is evidently the case in most places) a combination to keep up prices exists among the meat sellers? The meat cart is an expensive and ready means to beat the extortions of little "combines," though it would be important against the big one.

One esteemed correspondent, north of Minneapolis, says he can get the beef from Minnesota steers cheaper from Chicago than he can get it from his local butchers. This shows how thankful we should be that our beef interests are not at the mercy of those local butchers instead of the "Big Four." The first and highest duty of farmers and others is to beat these local "combines" and extortioners; surely, they can do it; but if they cannot, how absurd to be talking about beating the big and powerful combines and monopolies of the day.

Fertile Journal: The Fertile creamery took a high premium at the state fair. Three samples of butter only were above that from our own town, and these in each case was butter made by the seperator process. Two only by the other process graded as high as that sent by Messrs. La Due & Co. The number of competing creameries was thirty-seven. Although but a few days have passed since the result of the contest was published, there has been a noticeable increase in the demand for Fertile butter. The pleasing results of La Due & Co's efforts to make first-class butter is quite gratifying and it speaks well, too, for the ability of their buttermaker, Mr. Lang.

FROM MINNESOTA.

Congressman Comstock in Washington Sizing up the Situation.

WASHINGTON, Special to Pioneer Press, Nov. 22.—Congressman S. G. Comstock of Minnesota is in Washington and has taken apartments at 1416 K street, a few doors from Senator Washburn's residence, and the same rooms which were occupied by Thomas Wilson last winter. Mr. Comstock is accompanied by his wife and three children and Miss May Baldwin of Fargo, N. D., a niece of Mrs. Comstock. The congressman from the Fifth district has always been credited to Reed in the fight for speaker, and the prediction is probably not far from right, but he is likely to go with the Minnesota delegation if they can get together and vote as a unit. "If we don't have any better success than when we tried to agree on appointments, our conference will amount to but very little," said Mr. Comstock to-night, "but as nearly all the members have signified a desire to confer, it will be agreeable to me." Mr. Comstock has been looking over papers in the appointment room of the postoffice to-day, and will recommend some appointments shortly. Early in the session he will introduce a bill for the relief of settlers who have taken land in the indemnity limits of the Manitoba road and who were by a recent order of the land office notified that their claims were invalid. Mr. Comstock says the rights of these settlers should not be jeopardized, and that the money they have paid the government should be returned to them. Further than this the time they have spent acquiring a residence on these lands should be allowed them when they select other lands. There are many settlers affected in the Duluth, St. Cloud and Crookston land districts. Mr. Comstock also hopes to secure an increased appropriation for the Duluth harbor the Duluth public building, also for the improvement of the Red River and Big Stone Lake. He will do all he can to help Representative Snider secure a place on the appropriations committee, as he believes that it will be for the interest of the whole state to have a man on that important committee. He does not expect to make changes in the important offices in his district except as vacancies occur.

Indian Reminiscences.

Duluth Tribune.

Gus Beaulieu, Deputy United States Marshal, was in the city yesterday on business connected with the whisky cases tried before Commissioner Carey. Gus has Indian blood in his veins, and, although he has been drawing a salary from the government for a number of years, his official business has called him among the less civilized the greater part of the time, and what he does not know about the Indians, there is no need of any one else trying to learn. He can easily locate any one of them wanted as a witness, and through his vast experience, he is possessed of an enormous fund of reminiscences which he never tires of telling.

Mr. Beaulieau has never drank or smoked, and he is just as anxious that all of those with Indian blood in their make-up should refrain. For this reason he is unrelenting in his pursuit of any person suspected of furnishing Lo with firewater, and he has had some long chases, but he is usually successful in rounding-up his man. Some time ago, a well-known chief residing on the White Earth Reservation was charged with intruducing whisky among his brothers. He also had the reputation of having killed several men. A warrant was sworn out for his arrest and Gus started after him. He heard that the officer was on his track, and thinking he was to be tried for murder he succeeded in eluding the officer. On one occasion he saw some lumbermen crossing a lake, and thinking that they were the officers, he concluded he would add another scalp to his string, and he began firing at them. Fortunately they were not injured and the chief made good his escape. He was afterward captured and served a short sentence in jail.

The deputy tells an interesting experience in the life of Wadena, the Indian who was responsible for the "bloody uprising" in Mille Lacs County last June. Wadena was in St. Paul as a witness in a whisky case, and while there he succeeded in accumulating a comfortable load himself, and as a result he was arrested and sent to the workhouse. At that institution his hair was clipped short and when he was released, he lost no time but made tracks for the reservation. Upon his arrival at home, he tied his head up in a cloth and for six weeks did not show himself outside of his wigwam. He felt the humiliation very deeply, and to this day will hang his head in shame whenever the subject is mentioned.

Mr. Beaulieu tells a pretty good one on a St. Paul saloon keeper named Schroeder, who is now serving a sixty-days' sentence for selling whisky to the Indians. Heretofore Judge Nelson has been very lenient with this class of offenders, fining them a small amount if they plead guilty or sentencing them to thirty days in jail if they stood trial, but the commission recommended that the punishment be more severe, and when Schroeder was found guilty he was given a sentence of sixty days. Now the prisoner has considerable money and a great many friends, and he did not fancy the idea of serving the sentence in a jail, so he "fainted" when sentence was pronounced, got his family physician to pronounce him in bad shape, and he was transferred to St. Joseph's hospital in St. Paul, where he receives his friends and is watched by a deputy marshal at his own expense.

A Wonderful Offer.

It makes a specialty of market reports, giving the markets of the current day of issue. In cities and towns which we cannot reach by mail the same evening of the date of the paper, the mail will arrive during the night, so that the subscriber will find the News at the post office the next morning with as late market reports as will be supplied by the morning paper several hours later.

War on the Sugar Trust.

The Western Rural.

Trusts have been so rapidly organized during the last few years, "cornering" nearly every necessary and many of the more commonly used luxuries of life—the undisguised objects being to extort money from the consumer—that the people have become exceedingly irritated and restless. Never in the history of this country has a greater degree of unrest been manifested among the people; and whenever such a feeling develops the conclusion may be at once reached—without the slightest fear of indulging an error—that there is grievous injustice somewhere. People in the full enjoyment of their rights do not, as a people, complain. The history of oppression and outrage, finally ripening into an effort of some kind to throw off the yoke. Ours is a prosperous country. A more rapid accumulation of wealth has never been seen during the entire history of the world; and even now while farmers are selling grain and stock at a positive loss, middlemen are making money in handling the farmer's products. The profits are sufficient even now but they are diverted from the pockets into which they should go. The millions of producers are not being remunerated for creating that which is making somebody rich.

Under such circumstances it would be marvelous if the American people, whose life-training has been in the direction of the belief that impartial justice is the chief corner stone of our system of government, should not become restless and resort to unusual and somewhat heroic means of self-protection. The notion of boycotting sugar for the purpose of crippling the sugar trust, is a resort of this character, and whatever anybody may think of its practicability, the idea clearly shows that the people are agitated and that the public mind is working in a direction that will ultimately overwhelm all such injustices as are represented by the plundering trusts; and it is a consummation devoutly to be wished

For a long time the consumer has been paying three or four cents a pound more for sugar than it was squarely worth in the market, simply because a body of men had combined to rob the consumer of that excess. It requires but little computation to show what an enormous aggregate this extortion has taken from the consumers of the United States, and with something of a conception of that large amount, there will be little wonder in any unprejudiced mind that the idea of giving up the use of sugar until it can be had at a reasonable price, should be entertained by many of the most thoughtful people in the country. But although this course may be open to objection upon the grounds that it is not the best course or indeed that it is not practical, our people when sufficiently aroused will sometimes accomplish their purpose through very extraordinary means. They are descendants of the people who landed on Plymouth Rock, and the birth of American civilization at the landing of the Pilgrims, was about the last thing that men and women would have expected. The destruction of the tea in Boston harbor, the declaration of independence on the part of a few weak colonies and the armed resistance of these colonies to the authority of a powerful nation, seemed wild and reckless. But it was an unconquerable spirit of manhood that suggested them, and that spirit is still alive among the American people. Whatever course may be determined upon to crush the sugar and other trusts, there need be little fear of failure if the people are united. It is probably true, however, that our emancipation from such evils, if permanent, will come through a closer union of the masses, and efficient anti-trust legislation as a consequence.

Grand Army of Organized Farmers.

Western Rural.

For twenty years the farmers of this country have been organizing, and organization among this class has been much more successful than it has ever been among other classes of labor. This statement will surprise those who have not investigated the subject, but it is nevertheless true. Other classes have sometimes organized more rapidly but their work has been less permanent. There has been a greater degree of harmony in farmers' organizations than there has been in other labor associations. While it is true that "farmers' clubs"—once quite an extensive system—and some independent State farmers' organizations have gone to pieces, and while it is also true that some of the existing societies may not be as strong numerically as they were twenty years ago, there is more solidity to the present organizations, a more perfect bond of unity between them and a much larger active membership in them as a whole, than any one organization possessed twenty years ago. We doubt if the Patrons of Husbandry was ever in better condition than it is to-day. Its membership is substantial and dependable. The Farmers Alliance, Northern and Southern, is a very large harmonious and aggressive body of producers. The Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association is strong, especially in Illinois, and is spreading rapidly. The Patrons of Industry, which originated in Michigan, has gained a strong foothold in that State and is commanding respectful attention and confidence elsewhere, and the Agricultural Wheel is a Southern States farmers' organization of power and influence. The aggregate active membership of all these organizations is not less than one and a half millions of the most intelligent farmers in the country. What promises to add to the power of these associations, too, is the rapidly developing feeling in each of them that they should unite their efforts for the public good, practically, if not under one government. Such union has already taken place between some of them, and there are to be conferences held next month, looking to a more perfect unity. Thus there has been a very steady advance for twenty years among farmers toward a more extended harmony of action than has taken place among any other producing class. The future promises well for farmers organizations.

Horsemen everywhere are speaking in the highest terms of The Breeder's Gazette, and those of our people who are interested either in draft or trotting-bred stock will be interested in learning that the subscription price of this popular and old-established weekly has been reduced from $3 to $2, and can be had even as low as $1.50 per year in clubs of five or more. Its turf department is in the capable hands of Mr. H. T. White of the Chicago Daily News, the editor of John Splan's "Life With the Trotters;" and its draft-horse matter is confessedly far ahead of that obtainable from any other source. The Gazette is a thoroughly good "all round" live stock paper—cattle, sheep, and swine all coming in for good attention—and should be largely read in this county. Be Good to Yourself.

Do you say the world is selfish enough already and needs no such advice as this? Granted; still if people are selfish, why not tell them how to be so to some purpose? Many people are ignorant of the good things to be had, unskilful in avoiding annoyances, and in fact do not know how to be good to themselves. At home, we can shun discomfort to a great extent, because we know our surroundings well, but the inexperienced traveler has many trials, which he really need not have had. When you resolve to take a journey, take a little forethought about your route; inquire about the accommodations, the equipment, the time record, safety, and the treatment travelers receive. In all these points "The Burlington" excels, and to be sure of it, buy your tickets over that line going east, north, south or west. For full information write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn., or call on your local agent.

White Specks in Butter.

E. G. Fuller in Prairie Farmer.

In a recent number of The Prairie Farmer, an article copied from the American Creamery attributes white specks in the butter to a curd formed by the whey in the cream, when the latter has become so sour as to produce whey; and as a remedy, advises salting the cream before churning, to cut, or dissolve the curd.

The remedy is only a partial one at best; and I have never found it a satisfactory one. Of course, in theory, cream should never be allowed to become thick; but sometimes in warm weather it does, from lack of proper facilities for controlling temperature, and upon many farms where the old-fashioned shallow pans are still in vogue, milk is not skimmed until it is thick.

I have found that as soon as cream becomes thick, there is danger of white specks in the butter. There is always a small quantity of clabbered milk in this thick cream. This is nothing more nor less than curd, in its first stage of formation. When this is churned, it breaks up in small pieces, and though some of it runs out in the buttermilk, much remains in the butter; and as soon as the worker is applied, they spread out to almost as great an extent as a drop of oil upon water, and give the butter a beautiful (?) mottled appearance, which will take a few cents per pound from its value.

A very simple, and an effectual remedy, is to strain the cream through a cloth strainer. The particles of curd will not go through the cloth, but will stick to it.

Quite frequently during the past summer I have had this thick scum to deal with, and when it has been strained through a cloth, have never had a white speck; but on two or three occasions, when this has been neglected, have had plenty of them. The remedy is so simple that no one ought to be troubled in this matter.

MONEY TO LOAN

On city property. Inquire of Paterson & Lilly. [52-tf]

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as follows:

Each year on his insurance.......$88 44
Each year on his loan for interest.. 80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years..........1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest..............................$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of............ 500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years.............................. 1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest...................................$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years..... 1000 00
Total...$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

Do not wait until too late but call now for bargains before my stock is all sold. Only a short time remains to secure groods at present prices.

A. G. GALLASCH.

It was our pleasure last week to go through the Pioneer Press establishment from cellar to garret and if there is a larger or better managed establishment in the world we would like to see it. From the mighty engines in the basement to the composing room on the top floor everything is in complete and thorough working order; every employe seems to know and be in his place and to work harmoniously and effectualy. From the roof one can get something of an idea of what St. Paul is as a good view of the village can be had from that point of view. The Pioneer Press, since it occupied its new quarters has improved very much, mechanically, and no wonder for it has every facility that the ingenuity of man can conceive.

Good Union cassamere overcoats at $3.50, $4.00, $4.50 and $5.00, at the C. O. D. Clothing House.

We took a whirl over the new Duluth, Crookston and Northern road last Thursday night. We found the road in elegant shape—rides as smooth and quiet as many an older road. Arrived at Fertile we found that we had an hour before the train on the Duluth & Manitoba, so went about to see some of our acquaintance. As it was supper time, everybody was probably busy with that important event; howbeit, as a newspaper man never eats, we found Bro. Sibley, of our Fertile namesake busy as a nailer in his office, notwithstanding a grand ball was in full blast near by where many beautiful damsels would, doubtless, fain have lured him—but, it was publication day, other forms claimed his attention, so the fair maidens had to sigh in vain for his presence. (P. S. We'll bet a big apple he went later.) Bro. S. has a fine office and gets out a good local paper. As it is the duty of Fletcher Sankey to cater to the wants of the eating public, we found him at his restaurant as busy as a bee attending to the wants of his patrons, and—"say, mister," didn't he fix us up a boss lemonade with an egg in it? Well, we should smile; ask Mike, Mr. S. reported a good business in his line, extra good while the construction crew was in town. We dropped over to the postoffice to see the handsome postmaster, but whom we saw was not him, howbeit much better looking—to our notion. Hendricks himself had gone up—to supper. Fertile, by gaslight, has the appearance of being a lively, stirring business place, and we were told that a large quantity of wheat has been marketed there. If we was to suggest any improvement in railroad facilities we should say that she deserves a more commodious depot, as the cracker box is slightly out of whack and—well, rather small, several hundred people could hardly get inside. Our charming young sister city seems to contain within herself all the elements of future prosperity, and her business men seem possessed of that vim and energy that always attains success. Long may she wave, says THE JOURNAL

Dr. M. Leguee took a much needed rest from business cares last week and went to visit friends and relatives in Hudson, Wis., and Minneapolis. While in St. Paul the doctor called at the dime museum to see the two-headed infant. Says she is a "royal flush." The doctor returns this week refreshed for his duties after his pleasant vacation.

Ladies call and examine my stock of shoes and slippers and get prices. Am determined to dispose of my stock before Jan. 1st which means great bargains for somebody. Now is the time, A. G. GALLASCH.

A large number of our citizens went to Duluth on Friday evening of last week and spent the day Saturday looking over the coming metropolis of the Northwest. They put up at the Spalding and for that day at least "lived high," the dining room being on the top floor. The citizens of Duluth took pains to entertain them and all declare that they had a grand good time.

Ladies watches, Boss gold filled with Elgin movement, stem wind and set, elegant time pieces, from $18 to $35, at C. H. Saake's Jewelry store.

Funny aint it? But a fact nevertheless that others in the city "did not know" that we have a butter and egg cold storage house and one prominent citizen goes as far as to say that we have not and even intimates that the Times man does not know anything about what he is talking about. This citizen says that a butter and egg cold storage house must be perfectly dry as well as cold and absolutely free from any odors of any kind, that they are not built at all like a packing house—that it is impossible to build one capable of handling any business of any account at a cost less than $10,000 while it is his opinion that a packing house can be built for less than $10,000 and that no packing house, whatever it cost after having been used for lards and meats would do at all for butter and eggs. All of which inclines us to the opinion that THE JOURNAL is right in advocating the building of a butter and egg house and it ill becomes the Times, with its professions to try to throw cold water on a plan fraught with so much good to our citizens.

Organize for Work.

Winter is the season for mapping out work for the future and we presume the necessity for organization is apparent to every farmer. Now is the time to hear what the Alliance workers have to say for their cause and as the Alliance has a corps of trained lecturers in the field it would be a good plan to have a few in Polk County. If any of our farmer friends will arrange for a place for a speaker to address them and will arrange all details, such as distributing notices, etc., we will arrange for a speaker to be sent them, the dates to be arranged to suit the speaker's convenience. THE JOURNAL desires to hear from any farmers who would like to arrange for dates for meetings. Write us about it, friends.

"Thank You."

About a month ago a single harness was stolen from Chris Anderson on the J. R. Clements place north of the city. One day last week one of Chris' hired men went up to the place and found the harness lying in front of the stable door. Chris says "thank you."

E. P. Pierce took a run to St. Paul last week.

J. W. Wheeler has so far recovered as to be able to go Chicago for which point he started last week.

Halvor G. Dale was up from Neillsville on Wednesday of this week and gave THE JOURNAL a call of the kind we like. Says business is rather quiet on the west side this winter.

We have filled the building adjoining our store with all kinds of Second Hand Household Goods and will pay the highest cash price for second hand goods.

K. D. Chase was in the city this week with a Mr. Perley, of Michigan who is considering the project of putting in a saw mill. He is very favorably impressed with the prospects and may decide to locate a big mill here.

Dr. Leguee happened to be in the vicinity of the Tribune building at the time of the fire and gives a very graphic description of the terrible scenes there enacted. Says the people appeared to be nearly frantic and the police could not control them in the least. He saw many of the victims fall from the building to their death and will never forget the terrible sight while life lasts.

The wife of Michael Mullen died of typhoid fever on Friday of last week, at the family residence, on the Steege place, about 2½ miles east of the city. She was a sister of Miss Lena Anderson, the young lady whose death THE JOURNAL reported a few weeks since and contracted the fatal disease taking care of her sister. The funeral occurred on Tuesday at the house.

The St. Paul Daily News is one of the best, if not the very best, of St. Paul's excellent evening papers. JOURNAL readers now have an opportunity to secure it for a song. For all of our subscribers who are in arrears and who pay up said arrearages and one year in advance we will send the St. Paul Daily News and THE JOURNAL for $2.50. Now is your time.

Henry T. Gilbertson, the new postmaster at Erskine took in the excursion to Duluth and spent some time in this city. Thinks Duluth the coming city of the Northwest and the natural trading point for this country. Wants the Duluth & Winnipeg to hurry up and give us a direct communication. Says active preparations are being made to cut and ship wood from his vicinity to this city.

The funeral of A. T. C. Pierson, Grand Secretary of the Masonic Grand Lodge was largely attended on Friday last. The parade of the Sir Knights was the largest demonstration of the kind we ever saw and hundreds of Master masons also were in line. It is said to have been the largest of the kind ever witnessed in St. Paul.

A terrible fire occurred in Minneapolis last Saturday night by which seven lives were known to have been lost and possibly more. The building was the eight story edifice owned by the Tribune company in which were the offices of the Tribune, the Journal, the Tribune-Star, the Minneapolis department of the Pioneer Press and the Svenska Folkets Tidning. The loss was great but as naught compared with the valuable lives sacrificed. The building is said to have been poorly provided with fire escapes.

Our contemporary objects to the plan of building a butter and egg cold storage house, because, (he says) we already have one and accuses us of ignorance of the fact. Well, we must confess that we did not know that we had such a place where butter and eggs have been bought of our farmers thus affording them a good cash market for their produce and we call upon him to tell us where it is and we will gladly tell our readers, so that they having the benefit can make some money. We doubt if many of them know that such an institution exists in our midst, and its existence (if it exists) covers our point exactly. We have said that the city now has a chance to obtain an institution built expressly for this purpose, at a cost of $10,000, with a buyer always ready to take butter and eggs and pay the cash for them; send them all over the country, get the cash bring it here and re-invest it. If you have got such an institution about your clothes Mac., trot it out and you will be entitled to honor as a public benefactor.

IMPORTANT TO LUMBEAMEN,

And Others Employing Men in Camps.

I am instructed to ask your immediate attention to the necessity of knowing that the men you employ this winter are thoroughly protected by vaccination against Small Pox. To avoid the terrible experience of a few years ago, vaccination is the sure safeguard. It is as much for the benefit of the men as for yourselves and the people at large. To be safe, therefore, re-vaccinate every one who has not had a successful vaccination within the last five years, and can show a good scar as evidence thereof.

Your foremen should keep a list of the men, in this respect, and should be on their guard against any eruptive disease appearing among them. Instruct them to isolate any one having suspicious symptoms, with their clothing and bedding, till a medical opinion, or sufficient time shall develop their true character. I will advise any one of them, promptly, who will write me for the purpose, and will be obliged for the earliest informatoin of anything suspicious, that we may give assistance where needed.

Very respectfully yours,
FRANKLIN STAPLES, M. D.,
Acting Sec. State Board of Health.
Red Wing, Minn.

The Herald, of Duluth, generously gives Mitchel, of the Tribune, "a chance to go west and take a much needed rest after 19 years hard labor," and says the Tribune is to change hands. Mitchel declines the offer with thanks and replies that when the Tribune is sold he will give the first information to the public himself. Mitchel has done more work for Duluth than any other man in it, and while others have grown rich out of the results of his labors, he has had to accept printers pay for all his work and, of course, is not rolling in wealth, while he is far more deserving than many who are rolling in wealth.

Merriam Will Help the Farmer.

While in St. Paul last week we dropped in at the State House to see Governor Merriam and ascertain what we could do to cause the wheels of government to run smoothly and decided, after a few minutes chat, that W. R. Merriam is the Governor of this Great State of Minnesota and there is no "fine Italian hand" power behind the throne. He is giving the State a business administration and the rights of the poorest man in it are as sacred in his eyes as those of the millionaire. As we are more interested in wheat up here than anything else the conversation naturally drifted into wheat and we related one or two instances in which cars had been refused to parties who desired to ship. The Governor said that he makes a personal matter of every such case coming to his notice, and wished us to say to JOURNAL readers that whenever they are refused ample facilities for shipping, if they will apprize him at once he will make it a personal matter and see that a remedy is at once applied and he will also feel grateful to the party so making complaint as it gives him an opportunity to act. He says that he is fully satisfied that wrongs exist and that he will do all in his power to right them. We feel satisfied that in Governor Merriam the farmer has a firm friend—one who can be approached at any and all times as freely as one would talk with an ordinary citizen on business matters, and no one need hesitate to communicate with him at any time they do not get their rights in the matter of transportation.

Undoubtedly Drowned.

Last week THE JOURNAL noted the sudden disappearance of Eddie Zeigler from Miner Rood's place on Maple Lake near Mentor. A diligent search since then failed to reveal his whereabouts but there can be no doubt that the poor boy got into some airhole and was drowned. Every attendant circumstance seems to point to this conclusion and the probability is that the body can not be recovered before the ice thaws in the spring.

A Big Sacrifice.

Better Late Than Never.

On Wednesday Charlie Bailey dropped into our den with a bran new twenty-five cent cigar and remarked: "Here's to my recent marriage." "Ho," we remarked, and as we proceeded to light and enjoy the unwonted luxury we thought had it followed the event, three weeks or so ago, it would doubtless have been a ten center. To make the thing more binding and to cheer the printer Chas. enrolls his name on our rapidly growing list of JOURNAL readers.

Standard Works.

Wm. Clements has novels from such standard authors as Dickens, Thackeray, Scott, Pope, Charlotte Bronte, Cooper etc., etc. Those books are solidly and neatly bound in cloth and are sold at prices that are the lowest ever offered in this city. What an elegant Christmas present you can get for a very small cost. Don't fail to see these books and get prices. [31-tf]

Bro. Dunn, of the Princeton Union, and Bro. Sheets, of the Todd County Argus, are pitching into Bro. Fish, of the Great West, calling him a demagogue because he says: "No farmer should ever vote, in primary or at the polls, for a middle man, wheat buyer, or even a railroad sympathizer for the legislature. We don't see how you can do it."

Well, what is there wrong with that? Is it not, or should it not be the farmer's first duty to look out for his own interests and is the middle man, the railroad man or the wheat buyer best calculated to subserve the farmers interests? Is it not the rather more natural for a man to look out for the interests of his class than any other? Farmers complain of injustice at the hands of these classes, and it would be the height of absurdity for them to elect them to regulate their wrongs, when others in full sympathy with the farmers would answer the purpose better. If those parties were in the majority do you suppose a farmer, or any man known to be in sympathy with their plans, would ever get into the legislature? You bet they would not, and why? Because it would not be for the interests of the objects they seek and the interests they represent. Then why should the farmers place them there? There is as much need of wise legislation to regulate the system of wheat buying now as ever, and only the best men should be sent to attend to it, and it is not wise to select men whose business interests are diametrically opposed to the farmers' to legislate for them. The farmers only desire a fair and equal showing on an open market, the others being satisfied with the present state of things, desire no change, hence would be totally unfit to represent the farmers' interests. We do not believe in the idea of forming a new political party to obtain justice for farmers; that is altogether too slow and tedious a process and wholly unnecessary; but we would insist that no man but a known friend to the farmer and his cause be nominated by either of the leading political parties, and then, in any event, the farmer alights on his feet. His friends are at court and he can get his rights. We do not believe it is necessary for the farmer to go outside of his political party even, but he should be enough alive to his own interests to see that his party nominates none but the farmers friends. If a man by his past course in the legislature has shown by his votes for everything that a railroad wants, or don't want, that his sympathy is with the company rather than with the people, spot him at once and have nothing further to do with him, for there are men enough whose interests are identical with the people to represent the people, and these alone should be nominated by either party. When a man tells you that a candidate must be a democrat or a republican to be a true friend of the people, you may put that man down as a rank humbug as, aside from the party principles involved, there are men in all parties equally the friend of the people. A man should decide which of the parties is nearest his idea of right in party principles, then work to secure the nomination of the best men of his party. There may be individual men in the classes to which The Great West objects, who are otherwise unobjectionable, but why should they be taken when there are others just as good without the objections of their business relations? On this point we perfectly agree with The Great West, but when that paper advises the farmer to organize a new party in order to obtain his rights, we think that valuable paper is way off its base. That method is altogether too slow for the exigencies of the case.

The Golden Rule In The Dairy.

The Prairie Farmer.

We recently witnessed two spectacles that are but illustrations of what is being constantly enacted everywhere. A farmer had purchased a cow, and armed with a long rope he went into the pasture to secure his property. Bossy had never been led before, and didn't pay much attention to the stranger's artful manœuvers till he had her securely by the horns; then she began to seek some means of escape. In stead of reassuring the crature in her fright, the new owner emitted volumes of profanity, and jerked on the rope as if he had lassoed a wild buffalo

The cow cleared a rickety board fence at one bound, and the farmer, who stubbornly held to the line, was slammed up against the panels in a way that made his teeth rattle. The old fence broke down and away went cow and man at a breakneck speed, the latter bounding and hopping along in the rear, somewhat like a tin teakettle tied to a frightened dog's tail. It was several minutes before the exhaustion prompted her to come to bay. and then, somewhat subdued, she yielded to the kicks and cuffs of the irate farmer as he cursed and beat her along the road.

The other instance mentioned was where a local drove was driving a few head of steers and bulls loose along the road, and the latter, in their savage ferocity, had gored the former till their flanks were lacerated.

In an instance like the first, no one should attempt to lead a cow until he has, by kindness and petting, secured her confidence. Animals, and cows especially, are quickly susceptible to human kindness, even where they have previously been habitually abused. It isn't sentiment to "harp" about this, it is simply plain, practical common sense.

It is often necessary, through purchase or exchange' to lead or drive milch-cattle from one farm to another, and if the owner's interests are consulted they will be transferred without exciting their passion or fright. The indifferent farmer will affix the leading-rope around the base of the horns, often tied in a slip-noose knot, and then swear at and beat the poor creature as she plunges half crazed along the road. The sensible one will perhaps have no horns to tie to, or if he does he discards their use for so cruel a purpose as a rope anchorage, and puts a stout halter onto his cow. He doesn't chase her, but straps the halter on her head in her own stanchion stall, in the stable, and with kindly words and manner leads her forth for the journey. He doesn't tie her to the hind exle of a wagon, and let his horse drag her by main force to her destination, as I have seen some ignorant people do.

An ordinary halter attached to a ten-foot rope is the best means of piloting a cow. The "pilot" should walk by her side, giving her plenty of play with the rope, and avoiding all needless jerking and violence. A dairyman who is habitually kind among his cattle will never have any truble in leading one of his cows anywhere. We have seen cows that would kick with the alacrity of Kentucky mules, within a few week's time subdued to the gentleness of lambs, by being made to feel that they had nothing to fear from the men who had them in care.

It is a well known fact that nothing will so quickly retard milk-secretion as undue excitement in the animal. By every means possible, therefore, keep the physical and mental systems of dairy cows at an even normal temperature. Successful dairymen attribute their "good luck" as much to such a course as to blood or feed.

In regard to the second instance taken notice of above, the writer is emphatic in his denunciation of driving bulls on the highway, in an unhampered state. In view of the frightful tragedies that frequently occur on account of horned bulls, it would be a blessing if the brutes were all hornless, but as the system that makes them so is comparatively slow in gaining ground, and perhaps will never be universal, we must do what we can to keep danger at arm's length.

In leading a bull, never let the creature walk behind you, for the action is as reckless as getting into range of a battery of Gatling guns. A bull's disposition can no more be depended on than the freaks of a whirlwind; so keep them under constant surveilance.

Many people are sentimental about dehorning these ugly creatures, but such sentiment is as illogical as it is unsafe in its results. We say saw off the horns at all hazards. It is better that a legion of bulls should suffer painful dehorning than that one man should be disemboweled.

Working bulls as oxen is practiced by many dairymen with good success. Broken to the yoke when young, they are as easily managed as the average steer, and they are very stout to draw. For such jobs as drawing out manure, hauling stone, etc., they are exceedingly handy. We have even seen them used for drawing milk to the cheese factory. A little labor seems to make them more docile.

Equanimity of temper is a cogent auxiliary of dairying. We may obtain the best blooded cattle on earth, feed them till they are as well favored as the kine of Pharaoh's dream, yet if they are constantly nettled by ill treatment, however slight, their profitableness will be diminished. It makes us better morally to be kindly to our flocks and herds, financially we are the gainers thereby.

Frozen Wheat for Seed.

D. N. Harper, in Northwestern Agriculturist.

In compliance with your request I am pleased to give your readers a partial report on the effects of seeding last year's wheat in the Red River Valley as I have observed them. Nearly all wheat grown in this region last year was rusted somewhat and much was thus very badly damaged. Many localities in the Valley also experienced severe frosts before the grain had matured. Much damaged wheat having been sown last spring, excellent opportunities are afforded for a study of the results.

For this we must first of all have a clear appreciation of the difference between rusted wheat and frozen wheat. "Frosted" wheat is a term we shall not use as it is too indefinite, and besides is misleading. Wheat having its bran blasted is called frosted, although in most cases this has been caused by other agencies than frost. Rusted wheat is more or less shrunken and of an amber color, darker than in normal wheat. The relations of the constituents are also changed, as the vegetable parasite rust has abstracted a portion of the starch, or otherwise prevented its formation. Such wheat has therefore less starch and more gluten and protein than normal wheat. The bran also bears a greater proportion to the rest of the grain. Frozen wheat, besides being badly shrunken, is more or less discolored, and has lost the normal translucent amber appearance. The frost has caused a chemical change in the constituents, most important of which is that gluten has been changed to other nitrogenous compounds, having different characteristics. Frozen wheat contains less starch and more protein than normal wheat. In two samples I analyzed I found it impossible to separate any gluten, although I deemed some to be present. [See Bulletin No. 7.]

On the sandy lands towards the eastern boundary of the Red River Valley, as also in isolated localities nearer the river, good wheat was harvested last year. A comparison of the results of seeding this and rusted and frozen wheat is both interesting and instructive, and in the future I hope to publish, with the assistance of Professor Hays, a fuller statement of the facts.

At Carman and northwards, besides being rusted, the wheat was to a large extent frozen. About Barnesville and and to the east and south, except in isolated localities, I have observed no frozen wheat to have been seeded, but much that was badly rusted. Some of the results attending the seeding of wheat this year I have observed to be as follows, namely: That under like conditions—on land of the same character and age, and cultivated and sowed alike—the quality and quantity of the crop has been dependent upon the quality of the seed; the older the land the poorer the crop, of course; drilled wheat has invariably been better than broadcasted; new land and summer-fallowed land—or the latter's equivalent—have alike produced the best and most wheat; where seed has been changed to a soil of different character the yield and quality have been improved; frozen wheat has in no case yielded a good crop; and as a rule the crop from rusted wheat has been deficient in quantity, even if, as sometimes, of fair quality. As nearly all of last year's wheat was rusted and are all grades and qualities of rusted wheat, our final opinion of it for seed, must be withheld until our analyses are completed, so that just comparisons may be made.

I have examined many particular cases of seeding wheat of different qualities and, as topical of the results, shall instance the following: At Fergus Falls I was told the poorest wheat in that neighborhood had been sown on the Ames & French farm. A sample of it in my laboratory as it came from the thresher shows the effect of rust, but there are many plump grains in it apparently uninjured. By cleaning 1,200 bushels Mr. C. J. Wright informs me they got 400 for seed. That left over from seeding sold this spring at Kirk's mill for No. 1 Northern and 2 Northern. This is poor compared with No. 1 Hard of the same density (see what follows,) but to call it poor without qualification is misleading. The conditions being favorable, a good crop has been harvested. I know of no wheat sown in this neighborhood which graded lower than No. 2 Northern. About Pelican Rapids the land is undulating and some of the wheat in the hollows was frozen last year. On higher land and on lighter soil the wheat had matured before frost came. All wheat was carefully cleaned and thus the frozen grains were cast out. Wheat has for the most part been sown broadcast and very little of that threshed exceeds ten bushels per acre, much goes as low as five, and only an occasional sample has graded above No. 1 or 2 Northern. Mr. Henry Palmer sowed good seed on poorer land adjoining that on which his neighbor sowed seed not so good. Here, as elsewhere, the better seed the better crop.

As regards frozen wheat, it has been, so far as I know, a failure. One or two instances will serve to show what I have everywhere observed. At Crookston Mr. William Himmelsbach sowed on part of his farm No. 1 Hard wheat, and on the remainder the best of last year's Scotch Fife, nearly, if not all of which had been frozen. From his No. 1 Hard seed he has a large crop of No. 1 Hard wheat, and from his frozen seed has a poor crop of wheat similar to the seed sowed. He, like many farmers similarly situated, has not cut the crop from some of the frozen seed and most that has been harvested will be used for feed. Near him, Mr. Samuel Marvin planted Scotch Fife, which had not been as badly frozen, but his crop is about as Mr. H's. He planted two bushels of good seed of the crop of 1877, from which he has good wheat. Mr. M. has also planted some Mammoth Spring wheat. This has a long beard and the grain is better protected than in case of Fife wheat. This crop last year was poor, but many grains appear to have matured before frost came, and from this seed, he has a better crop than from Fife. Although this and Blue Stem withstood rust and frost better than Fife, it is claimed they do not mill as well and are consequently less valuable.

Last year it was obvious that even the best wheat, as it contained some shrunken grains, could be improved by cleaning. I know of no seed having been planted without being well cleaned and it is safe to say that the salvation of the wheat crop is due largely to the fanning mill. Thus this fundamental principal has almost universally been made use of, although unwittingly by some, namely: That the best wheat for seed is that having the most vitality; which has, in other words, the greatest density—the highest specific gravity. The largest grains of wheat are the best for seed only when they are at the same time the densest. Wheat can surely and permanently be improved only when this principal is practiced. Many, if not most elevators, are provided with apparatus cleaning by suction blast, and by this means, after separating the heavy weed seeds, we can most readily and most surely obtain the best wheat seed. It is so important this selection of the best for seed should everywhere be made, that I have suggested to elevator men that thus they can profitably clean for the farmers good wheat for seeding purposes at merely nominal rates. They have invariably replied they would be pleased to do it for nothing. If the farmer will have his best wheat treated thus by a strong suction blast he can obtain the very best of it for seed and sell the balance at as good a figure as he could the whole.

Our experience has shown the wheat germ to be possessed of wonderful vitality so that much, and as a rule most, of the poorest wheat of last year has grown. But to produce good wheat it would seem to be necessary that the seed should contain gluten, and where this has been absent, or its amount much reduced, I know of no crop of good wheat. It is not enough therefore to know that wheat will germinate and grow, but it must have stored up the proper food. I have elsewhere (see reference) given a simple method applicable everywhere to determine the presence and amount of gluten. Wheat from which flour cannot be made cannot yield good milling wheat.

Much of last year's wheat was really not as poor as the elevators deemed it. In one instance, near Pelican Rapids, 30 pounds of flour to the bushel were made from wheat that could not find a market, and and similar wheat at Fargo yielded 27½ pounds. This was the poorest wheat I saw at the latter place. Numerous other cases might be cited. Some farmers having such wheat have it in mind to save the best of it for next year's seed, but it is not advisable to hold over thus even No. 1 Hard wheat of 1888. If back of the result of a good crop from questionable seed, the causes which on our part produced it are clearly seen, and those put in practice are the best of this year's wheat, we can safely trust Nature to do her part and grant a much better crop next year. Let the best of our wheat be thoroughly cleaned, the densest sown and exchanges made were advisable.

A Scrap of Paper.

A scrap of paper, lying in the office waste-basket or blown along the street, is an insignificant thing, and no one gives it a thought. Yet upon such a small bit of paper may depend life and death, kingdoms and crowns, health and disease, comfort and annoyance, pleasure or pain. The death warrant of the Queen of Scots was but a small piece of paper; Magna Charta was but a sheet of it; the Declaration of Independence was but a scrap of paper; but how great was their influence for weal or woe. A "scrap of paper" is not much, and yet it may mean all the difference in the world to us. A twenty or fifty dollar bill is only a scrap of paper, but it will buy another scrap of paper—a ticket over "The Burlington" to Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Cheyenne, and fifty more thriving places, assuring you a pleasant, safe, speedy and comfortable journey. For tickets time tables, etc., apply to local agent, or to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Officially Acknowledged.

Duluth News.

The News has often pointed out the fact that a line from Crookston to Duluth was a necessity to the Manitoba system, and has stated its expectation that such a line would be built, but it is only within a few days that official acknowledgement of an intention to constrct the line has been made by the company. The fifty miles or so from Crookston to Fosston, already completed, could not be taken as proof positive of an intention to build to Duluth, as that is part of the surveyed line of the St. Paul, Brainerd & Northwestern. But Second Vice-President Clough said a day or two ago, "The construction of that line has been definitely decided on and will be taken up soon." He stated that the exact route had not been decided on yet, a number of surveys having been made, but with the assurance that the line is coming the exact route is of less interest to Duluth than to the half dozen interior towns which may secure it. The new line will run the greater part of the way through virgin territory, the development of which will give it a paying local traffic entirely independent of the business that will come to it as a part of a great through line. Those who fear that the building of two railroads in a general northwestern direction from Duluth will be overdoing the thing, simply lack information as to the extent and the resources of the undeveloped territory. I would not be at all rash to prophesy that there will be more than 5,000 miles of road in the northern part of the state in 1895.

Nevertheless the new road will derive its greatest importance from the fact that it will link in a new through line from Duluth to the Pacific. The great northern line of the Manitoba—soon to become Great Northern in name as well as in fact—with its temporary termini at Helena and Fosston, is a good deal like a bridge which is completed with the exception of both shore spans. It is quite as necessary that the line be extended from Manitoba to the Pacific cost as from Crookston to Duluth, and Mr. Clough, in the same interview, stated with equal positiveness the intention of the company to build to Puget Sound. The Manitoba has shown a disposition in the past to give Duluth the treatment due her position, and there is no reason to expect that this policy will be changed in the future. The completion of the new trans-continental line will mean much for Duluth. One result will doubtless be to give this city a first-class train service to the west, which it seems to be the settled policy of the Northern Pacific to deny. But the competition will probably compel the latter company to follow suit, and we shall get two first-class train services at once. Will the Great Northern push its lines to east and west as fast as possible?

Mild Winter Theory So Far Proves True.

Moorhead News.

Some time ago, it will be recollected by our readers, the News and Sergeant Dosher, predicted a mild winter this winter, which prediction was based on the records of the signal station here showing that cold winters and warm winters had come invariably, since the establishment of the station, in pairs, and the last winter having been warm, to carry out the rule, the present winter would be warm also.

In support of this theory to date we have to say that the mean temperature for October last was almost precisely the same as the year previously. And now we have the data for November, 1889, just passed, and compared with that of November, 1888, are as follows:

Mean temperature, 1888, 25.7 degrees above.

Mean temperature, 1889, 24.8 degrees above.

Thus if will be seen that the mean temperature for November, 1889, is only nine-tenths of one degree colder than for November, 1888.

Highest temperature, 1888, 65 on the 2d.
Highest " 1889, 59 " 9th.
Lowest " 1888, 3 " 17th.
Lowest " 1889, 5 " 29th.

REDRESS DEMAND.

Red River Farmers Protest Against Ill-Treatment.

St. Paul News.

HALLOCK, Dec. 5.—The farmers on both the Minnesota and Dakota sides of the Red River Valley have keenly felt the oppressive hand of monopoly this fall. The elevator system of grading this year makes a choice No. 1 wheat only a No. 3, if not rejected, and the local buyers are unable to extricate themselves from the toils of the elevator kings. The farmers know they are being robbed at least two grades on every bushel they sell, yet they have no redress as the state inspector has so ruled it. Again, on the Dakota side, for instance, at St. Thomas and Hamilton, the Manitoba road positively refuses to let Eklund Bros., who are track buyers, have a single car for the shipment of wheat purchased. The commission men of Minneapolis and Duluth should know this state of affairs and see if it cannot be remedied. The track buyers throughout the valley, on both sides of the river, are paying more for wheat than the elevators, and that is doubtless where the trouble arises, the elevators and railroads being in the same boat together.

KNUTE NELSON'S CHANCE

Considered Good by Messrs. Young and Carson.

St. Paul News.

Representative Young, of Swift County, and W. J. Carson, of Pope County, were caught sight of at the Merchants this afternoon. They discussed politics very cautiously and conservatively, and like most people who are accosted now-a-days, were reticent about putting their opinions on record.

Mr. Young said the people of his county were for Scheffer two years ago, and thought that gentleman had lots of friends up there yet. So far as he knew there was no fault found with the administration of Gov. Merriam, but not having canvassed the matter a bit he could not say whether his renomination would be favored or not.

"I believe," said Mr. Young, "that there are many dormant elements which will come to the surface as obstacles during the next campaign, and it will be necessary for the Republicans to put up their strongest man, and avoid any serious mistakes."

He declined to state who, in his opinion, was the strongest man, but afterward acknowledged that Knute Nelson could not only poll practically the solid vote of the party, but a large majority of the votes of the Democratic Scandinavians.

"Yes," chimed in Mr. Carson, "he would carry our county, and, in fact, the whole northern portion of the state with a whoop."

Neither gentleman expressed his individual preference, but both agreed that a strong man was necessary, and that Nelson was the strongest man.

Duluth & Winnipeg.

A correspondent to the Duluth News says: Without any exception the Duluth & Winnipeg is the best new road I ever rode on, and I have ridden on enough of them to make my opinion worth something. This is due to several causes, prominent among which may be mentioned the phenomenally low grades and light curvature. On the seventy miles soon to be completed the grade nowhere exceeds fifteen feet to the mile. I do not believe it will average half of that, and there are long stretches which are absolutely level. The maximum curvature is only four degrees, and that is found along the St. Louis, where the road runs on a narrow strip of bottom land lying between the bluffs and the river. Beyond the St. Louis the curves are few and short, merely slight changes in direction, and the road runs for mile after mile in an air line—a tangent, the engineers call it.

Standard track has 2,640 ties to the mile, but the Duluth & Winnipeg is above standard in this respect, for it uses 3,000 ties to the mile, or seventeen to each thirty foot rail, on the best of ground, and in swampy places this is increased to nineteen and even twenty to the rail, or 3,500 to the mile. That comes pretty near being corduroy road. Track held by eighty spikes to every thirty feet will not be very apt to spread, whatever else it does. The rails, for which such a solid support is provided, are of steel, and weigh sixty pounds to the yard. The result of all this was stated in the opening sentence—the Duluth & Winnepeg is the best new road I ever saw. In fact I have ridden on roads which had been in use four years which were not nearly as smooth, and never had been. President Fisher was taken down over a part of this not long ago at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour.

He Pleases Himself.

The New York Spellbinder.

The Saturday Globe, a Democratic review, published just across the street from this office, is out in an article headed, "Mr. Harrison has pleased himself." After stating that he has pleased nobody else, either inside or outside of his party, except the few who have been given office or influence, the editor proceeds to give it as his opinion that the late elections were a party rout. He goes on to say that the Virginia election settles it once for all that the president's proposed policy of breaking down the South by the formation of a white Republican party throughout the South is a disastrous failure. He goes further in regard to Iowa, and says that change is the consequence of changing public sentiment in regard to Prohibition and the Tariff. After a further and somewhat prolix review of the elections in the other States, he concludes; "Still another year of the pigmy politician from Indiana who now sits in the White House, and the people bid fair to return to Washington a House of Representatives which shall have an overwhelming majority of men in favor of giving real relief to the taxpayers of the country."

Now, in our opinion, this defeat in Virginia is a good thing, for it has taught our party what they have to contend with in the South, and will stir them up to the support of all influences tending to change those conditions which now make it possible to hold in peaceable intimidation a large number of citizens whose right to vote has been settled by constitutional enactment. How long it will take to educate the white men of the South up to a tolerance of the negro worthy of their otherwise manly progress cannot now be predicted, but the printing presses and steam boilers and mining picks of the country are trying as hard as they can to so change the Southern sentiment that both races shall recognize the great boon of citizenship to be one that is not to be lightly esteemed or easily taken away. The entire negro population is about one-thirteenth of the Republic, and it will find its political level without it being necessary for Southern men to strain their own manhood by intimidation or fraud committed against the same law that gave them their rights and protects them in their use. In regard to Iowa, we think our Democratic friend is right. It is but natural that in an off year those who were on the fence should accept the Democratic platform of High License in preference to the Republican Prohibition, especially when the Republican party is vaunting itself in the National councils as a High License party. He is also correct about the sentiment on the Tariff—that is, there is a large-sized reform sentiment in some parts of the West and probably in Iowa, which must and will be met by an intelligent revision of the Tariff by the Republican party this winter. Both parties are to-day a great deal larger than any man or set of men in either, and the man who for a brief period occupies the presidential chair is in the current of a drifting public opinion which no amount of patronage will either control or change. President Harrison should therefore please himself—that is, he should do that which best satisfies his own convictions and leave the rest to a power higher than that of any party, which rules the destiny of nations. Men who jump to conclusions about elections in a country like this are like children trying to set a limit to ocean tides. Certain it is that any party that through pride of conquest or greed of gain tries to thwart the will of the people expressed by a constantly rising tide of public opinion favoring both material and spiritual progress, will find all stakes and air castles set at ebb tide, likely to be out of sight at the next rise of the waters. Give us another blast Brother Globe, whenever you get steam on, it will do you good and can not hurt the party of progress.

Farmers and Politics.

American Farm News.

It is not the mission of this journal to enter into party politics and to uphold one party and decry the other. No such prerogative has been assumed by it. The American Farm News may even congratulate itself, that it does not have to perform the functions of a party political organ. Others are willing to do that kind of work while The News gladly holds aloof from it, being called to another field of labor.

But at the same time we have a word to say to farmers and their connection with politics. So long as theirs is a country ruled by the votes of the people no man can fold his arms, see the ship of State go drifting by, and say I have nothing to do with it. We all have something to do with the government of the country. The vote of the weakest citizen is a unit and counts for just as much as the vote of the millionaire. In determining the result of an election the vote of John Smith exactly balances the ballot of Cornelius Vanderbilt. The one is as potent as the other.

This equality of suffrage idea brings us to the point of saying here what we desire to speak of under the head of "The Farmer and Politics." The farmer is vitally interested in the government of his country and therefore he cannot afford to let his interests go by default, and he cannot clear himself of responsibility by entrusting his political affairs over to others.

He must act for himself. He is the one who votes and his ballot represents, —or should represent,—his conscience, judgment and intelligence. Therefore it is that we say to the farmer "take a hand" in politics. By this it is not meant that you shall be office seekers, and be always in the plunge for the "spoils of patronage."

But we do maintain that farmers should be students of politics and advise themselves as to the wisest policy for the town, city, county, state or general government to pursue. Possibly it may not be saying too much to recommend farmers to know the issues before them and then to follow their convictions rather than the conventions.

The American farmer is two large and too important a factor in the government of this nation to be indifferent about its political control. He has a right to his say in the matter and he should diligently, fearlessly and intelligently assert that right on all proper occasions. Should he fail to do so he will not rise to the position he is entitled to occupy in the politics of the country.

The good husbandman will be the sagacious citizen and while he provides for his own household, he will also be solicitious that no harm come to the state.

What the Starch Factory Has Done For Anoka.

Stillwater Cor. Pioneer Press.

Judge Hammons, of Anoka, was in the city Thursday. Although rum river has supplied Anoka with logs only one year in three, and the saw mills have been shut down, he says times are good, as the starch factory has purchased 500,000 bushels of potatoes, a boot and shoe factory has been started on a large scale, and another starch factory is to be erected of double capacity of the one now running. He said further that here in Stillwater was as good a location for a starch factory as with them, and they find it the best paying establishment that has ever been in town.

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, a company of great strength and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, as is more fully shown by the following statement: A aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as follows:

Each year on his insurance........$88 44
Each year on his loan for interest........80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years.........1684 40

which pays for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows: $1,000 for five years, annual interest........$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of........500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years........1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:
Interest........$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years........1000 00

Total........$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

A meeting of farmers was held at the City Hall on Monday evening last. Andrew Steenerson was elected chairman, and H. E. Cooke, secretary. The chairman stated that the object of the meeting was to inquire into alleged abuses in the methods of chattel mortgage foreclosures and to provide for a remedy, providing any could be found. The meeting being then thrown open to general discussion, took the form of a Methodist experience meeting, many arising and testifying to the general cussedness of the prevailing methods of chattel mortgage foreclosure. The general opinion crystalized seemed to be in favor of the organization of a county central committee and township committees whose province should be to inform themselves on all cases of alleged extortion that should be reported to them, these could be laid before an organization whose business it shall be to furnish relief in every case possible. One speaker took the ground that the work could be more effectively done by a Farmers' Alliance whose duties are to investigate and remedy as far as possible every evil of which the farmer complains—as this was only one among a hundred grievances the farmer suffers. He took the ground that the alliance of other interests against his profession must either force the farmers to combine or force them to the wall—and cited the condition of the markets of today—the wheat market controlled by wheat buyers and the meat trust controlled by the big four at the head of which is Armour, of Chicago. He thought the power attained by these monopolists ought to be convincing proof of the power of combination, and that if the farmers would only agree to agree and would form a strong association offensive and defensive, that they could do much to remedy existing evils. After a full and free discussion it was resolved to organize an association to be called the Polk County Farmers' Relief Association. On motion a committee to draft a constitution was elected, consisting of J. O. Sargent, M. E. Kirsch, Peter Cornelius, Christopher Steenerson and H. E. Cooke. Moved that all male adults of legal age be eligible to membership. On motion Andrew Steenerson and D. E. Hatlestad were appointed a committee to write to or communicate with every newspaper in Polk County requesting the insertion of a notice of the time and place of the next meeting, requesting the insertion of said notice each week until date of said meeting, and that the publishers insert such notice free of cost to this association. Moved that when we adjourn we adjourn to meet in this hall on the first Monday in January, 1890. After further discussion the meeting adjourned. The committee on constitution met and organized by electing M. E. Kirsch, chairman and H. E. Cooke, secretary. After fixing upon a date for a committee meeting, the committee adjourned.

Farmers Who Read.

Mr. Hayes, of Hayes Bros., Elna, was in the city last week and called at The Journal office to renew, also to subscribe for the St. Paul Daily News for one year. The boys are bound to keep well posted if they don't lay up a cent and reading men are the ones who always succeed where success is possible. Mr. H. reports satisfactory progress on the farm this year.

Just now the Times man is pluming himself like a peacock in summer time over "our" starch factory, taking to himself all the credit of the idea, all the while he is coolly stealing Judge Ives' thunder. The Judge was the first man to broach the subject several years ago and The Journal files contains columns on the subject from the Judge's gifted pen and other sources. A starch factory is a good thing and we need it but—say, Mac,—what's the matter with a good healthy butter and egg cold storage house, eh?

Nels Mulberg was in from East Grand Forks one day last week and while his horse was standing hitched by a halter to a post on Main street, some miscreant succeeded in gashing the animal's tongue, nearly severing that member. The cowardly deed was soon discovered and Mike Leguee was hastily summoned who took a few stitches in the tongue, then took the horse down to his hospital for further treatment. At last accounts the horse was doing nicely and will no doubt soon be all right again. Mr. Mulberg thinks he knows who did the dastardly deed, but it is doubtful if he can prove it. It is a very small pattern of humanity who would try to get even with a man against whom he holds a spite, by maiming a dumb animal.

Farmers' Meeting.

Notice is hereby given that a farmers' meeting will be held at the city hall, in Crookston, on Monday evening, Jan. 6th 1890, at 7:30, to take steps for the organization of the Polk County Farmers Relief Association. Every farmer in Polk County who feels an interest in the welfare of his calling is hereby cordially invited to attend. Ordered by vote of the meeting held Dec. 9th 1889.

H. E. Cooke, Sec. of Meeting.

IT IS DAWLEY.

On Tuesday W. B. Dawley received a telegram from Congressman S. G. Comstock which though brief was to the point. It reads: "Your commission will issue this morning." And so, at last, after many days Mr. Dawley gets his commission and will at once enter upon the discharge of his duties as postmaster. While this may prove a disappointment in certain quarters no one can for a moment doubt the justice of it for it would have been the height of injustice to have quietly shoved Mr. D. aside, unless charges of a serious nature had been preferred and sustained. This the administration could not afford to do nor do we think it had the desire so to do.

Those "Kickers."

It was not long since, when a number of our old-time citizens left for Tacoma, that the Times rooster flew up on the fence, crowed loud and long, because, he said, "the kickers have all gone; and now Crookston will prosper." A few weeks ago one of our old-time citizens suggested the idea of establishing a reliable butter and egg market. He investigated the matter and found that a storage house properly erected was an expensive institution, but on consultation with a few public-spirited citizens was encouraged to attempt to establish such an institution, which, from a commercial point of view would be worth as much to our city as is the great lumber mill, and it could be secured by a very small cost compared with what we paid to secure that institution. No sooner did it become possible that Crookston might secure the institution than the Times man began to "kick" to the best of his ability and now he jumps up on the fence and crows again loudly proclaiming that he has knocked it out, "that we have already got a place"—built for an entirely different purpose, with no reference to the end in view—a reliable and good butter and egg market, and therefore we "have a good butter and egg market" that is bringing in from $100,000 to $150,000 every year to our city to be expended for the purchase of butter and eggs. We are not disposed to be fault-finding but it is a fact too well known to need discussion that this same spirit which the Times man evinces toward an institution of so much value is one reason why Crookston is no further ahead in the race for supremacy with rival cities than she is, and it will be so as long as these "kickers" remain among us. Almost every time any project of like value is broached some "kicker" jumps onto its neck with some such flimsy excuse as "[illegible] has already got a smoke house, ergo Crookston don't need a butter and egg market" and down goes the grocery. Is this the way to build up institutions that make a city? The packing house is an institution of much value and is all right in its place if properly conducted, but the idea that because we have got a good packing house we need a school house according to the Times, nor a butter and egg market is too supremely ridiculous for comment. But that's the 'kicker' argument. If they can't have all the glory of originating the idea or the lion's share in the profits they make up their little minds that "no one else in this man's town shall carry the plan to success," and too often, for the good of the city they have been successful in defeating wise plans. This dog-in-the-manger policy is enough to ruin a city of far greater natural advantages than Crookston possesses and it is a policy that every enterprising citizen should sit down upon most emphatically. Experienced men, those who have made the business a success by long and patient study, men who by this experience know [illegible] about the subject [illegible] McKenzie does, tell us that the building necessary to make the business a success must be built specially for the purpose, and that buildings constructed for other purposes will not answer. They certainly ought to know what they are talking about. The parties talking about establishing a butter and egg market offer to give bonds to open a butter and egg market and maintain it for a period of years. Would not such an institution be worth all it cost us? But McKenzie says no because there is a place 15x50 where eggs and butter may be kept for three months! Well, suppose McKenzie's place proves too small, or not properly located, or otherwise ineligible, what then? Why, McKenzie says if the parties will not accept an unsuitable place for their business, why we better not have a butter and egg market at all! But is it policy for the city to drive away an institution of so much benefit as this would be if properly managed, upon so flimsy a pretext? We think not, and we are not afraid that all right-minded people will agree with us, for the need of all such institutions is too apparent for discussion. Let us then bury all those petty jealousies, rising above self let us act as a unit for the common good, in this way can we ever expect to build up such a city as we should have here.

A Farmers Alliance.

There could be no stronger argument for the organization of a Farmers' Alliance than was furnished by the illustrations given at the meeting on Monday evening of the peculiar methods employed in chattel mortgage collections sometimes practiced in this county. This question is one of vital importance to the welfare of Polk County farmers, but it is only one that it is the proper province of the Alliance to attend to in the interest of the farmers, and if we had an Alliance it would be a proper subject for a special committee to handle. The statement was made that much of the distress caused by excessive collection charges was due to the fact that the man who gave the mortgage was not fully posted on the subject. Had he belonged to an Alliance, properly conducted, he need not be ignorant for all such matters should be thoroughly discussed and every member became fully posted upon the subject and thus would know his rights and be prepared to guard them. Where so many reasons exist for combining it seems singular that there should be any need of discussion, but the fact that farmers do not unite shows a lacking somewhere. They do not seem to appreciate the power they might wield, or else they are not sufficiently aroused. The conditions of the markets shows the power of combination and we should think that farmers, knowing this as they certainly do know it, would be anxious to try it themselves. We do not pretend that all the evils the farmer has to contend against would disappear at once upon organization but we do pretend to say that in our judgment it furnishes the only means of escape as yet presented and it certainly is a step in the right direction. We must not expect too much of it either for if we should form an association and neglect to work for its entire success our efforts would be in vain. It took a vast deal of hard work to bring about the present state of things and it will require as much to find and apply relief. We are confronted with the fact that we are in a box and we have either got to scratch lively to get out of it or else lie supinely down, take it as it comes and endure it as best we may. Which will we do?

By resigning the presidency of the Soo road Senator Washburn has removed the strongest objection that was urged against his candidacy for U. S. Senator and now if he would but consent to recommend the Fifth Districts' candidate for district attorney, Hon. Halvor Steenerson, he would gain for himself many warm friends in this district. Mr. Washburn is among the brightest statesmen in that august body and his influence will be powerful.

The Western Rural.

The Western Rural and Stockman is one of the most valued agricultural papers on our list as much for the direct interest it takes in all questions affecting the welfare of farmers as for its intrinsic merits as an agricultural paper. It was the first to "catch onto" the twine monopoly and it made such a lively row that the twine men were glad to drop the scheme like a "hot 'tater" and come down to a reasonable basis. The Rural enlisted the farmers in a plan to defeat the scheme by agreeing not to use twine unless it could be had at living rates. Over one thousand names in Polk County helped to swell the Rural list and the way that twine combine came down off the roost was comical to see. Just now the Rural is engaged in fighting the sugar trust, and is making a hot and plucky fight, and, if the farmers and all interested would join hands with the Rural that cast like the twine combine would very soon take a tumble. The plain fact of the matter is that the farmer has for so long time been considered legitimate game for sharpers and shysters to pluck, and with so much success that he must either combine in self defence, or see his business ruined. He should not only do this but he should stand by such papers as the Rural who are doing so much in their behalf and furnish them the sinews with which to prosecute the fight vigorously. Every farmer in Polk County should have the Rural then he would keep posted on every move of the enemy and be thus better prepared to fight effectually. We will take pleasure in showing any of our readers a copy and in securing the Rural for all who may desire a weekly visit.

Open Letter to Whom It May Concern,

Fosston, Minn., Nov. 1, 1889.

Dear Sir;—We are pleased to certify that we have this day received your check for one hundred and ten ($110) dollars in full payment for the loss of one bay mare named Fanny and one ball, for which please accept our thanks. We feel it a pleasure to acknowledge to your company the prompt and satisfactory manner with which we have been treated by you, and we can recommend the Minnesota Farmers Live Stock Association to our friends and the public generally, feeling assured that in case of loss on live stock death, either by accident or disease, that its members can safely rely upon a just and prompt settlement. Yours respectfully,

A Cold Storage House.

Crookston, Dec. 7, 1889.

Bro. Cooke:—Every farmer in the county ought to be interested in the establishment of a cold storage house in Crookston. A few years ago a man started one in a small town in Iowa, which, like Crookston, had two railroads and was the county seat. This gave the farmers a cash market for eggs the year round, thus inducing them to raise more and better poultry. This seems a very little thing, but a young man who was from near that town, recently said to me: "The man in that house has benefitted the farmers of our county more than any other man, or corporation; he has paid us farmers hundreds of thousands of dollars in cash when wheat failed, and hogs were cheap, and there was no money in fat cattle." That man now pays out about seventy-five thousand dollars for eggs alone. Now a word as to the house:—they are expensive, they must be built just right or they will not keep stock, and hence will be worthless. They are so made as to hold from one thousand to three thousand tons of ice over the storage room; the temperature is the same the year round, always cool but never frosty, made completely dry by chemicals spread on the floor, and never heated with fire. I see by The Times that there is such a house in Crookston. I never heard of one this side of Iowa, not even in the twin cities. I doubt very much that there is a building in Crookston that will keep fruit, without frost and without fire in it, all winter. The Times was thinking of the many dressed poultry kept in cold storage, I guess, or like the man who wanted to know "what they need refrigerator cars for in this cold country?" Yes, we want the house, and we want a packing house, too, where they buy live hogs. A farmer can't have facilities for dressing fifty or one hundred hogs without much extra expense and loss, and when he has dressed his pork he cannot afford to sell it to a middle man, who simply packs it in barrels and gets as much for doing that as the farmer does for all his work. We must do something beside raise wheat. Yours truly,

PI.

COMPETITION IN WHEAT BUYING.

How Law is Neutralized and Obstructed.

Farm, Stock and Home.

There is a railroad and warehouse law in Minnesota which theoretically gives the farmers of the state a free and open market for their grain; the right to build independent or co-operative warehouses, which are expected to afford relief from the extortions, tricks or dishonesty of combination elevators. The law ostensibly gives the right to build these houses on railroad lands, and compels the roads to afford shipping facilities according to the requirements of the houses or elevators. The object of the law was to enable individuals or societies to build grain houses or elevators according to their means; in other words, to make possible the introduction into the grain handling problem of the state a healthful competition, which was forbidden by the system of combined or "line" elevators, which made grain handling a purely monopolistic affair. It has been the source of great surprise to many why more independent or co-operative elevators have not been built in the state, since the necessity for them was so great, and the law so liberally provided for them. Before building a house of any kind on the railroad's land a lease must be procured from the road, which cannot be refused, nor must other than a mere nominal sum be charged for it, but the law does not prevent conditions being attached to the lease by the railroad which in effect completely neutralizes the law and almost prohibits the building of the houses. One of such leases, submitted by the Manitoba railroad (and is, we are informed, substantially the same as those of other roads in the state) is now before us, and a perusal of it leaves no room to question further why so few independent grain houses are built in the state. Stripped of its legal phraseology and repititions the lease provides, after describing the premises to be occupied:

The lessee agrees that he will pay all taxes, assessments and water rents, general and special, that may be levied or assessed upon said property, building and lands during the continuance of this lease; and gives the lessor the right to construct and operate a track or tracks over any part of the described land not actually covered by the elevator or grain warehouse hereinafter referred to. The lessor agress to construct and complete to the satisfaction of the railroad a grain house and elevator of the capacity of thirty thousand bushels, with the necessary fixtures, machinery, appliances and appurtenances, and to operate the same during the existence of this lease for public use without discrimination, and so as at all times to furnish all requisite facilites for the receiving, elevating, cleaning and shipment of grain at said warehouse or elevator in a prompt and efficient manner at fair and reasonable rates, and to the reasonable satisfaction of the lessor, and so as to give no just ground of complaint to any one doing, or requiring to do business thereat. The lessee shall enlarge said warehouse and elevator and its appliances from time to time when required by the lessor to do so. Should the lessee fail to make payment for rent as herein specified, and fail to fulfill any of the covenants or provisions of this lease in regard to the management and operation of said elevator or grain warehouse; in that case it shall be lawful for the lessor (the railroad), upon thirty days notice of its intention so to do, to declare this lease at an end and to re-enter and take full pesession of the above rented premises, and hold and enjoy the same fully and absolutely without such re-entering making a forfeiture of the rents to be paid and the covenants to be performed by the lessee. It is further agreed that no other railroad or transportation company, or any person or persons engaged in transportation, shall have the right or be allowed the use of any track upon or extending to said demised premises, without the express permission in writing of the lessor, and he shall have the exclusive right of transporting all grain to be transported by rail to or from said warehouse or elevator.

The lessee does hereby assume all risks of loss, damage or destruction to the said warehouse or elevator, its fixtures, machinery, appliances or appurtenances and contents of said warehouse or elevator, occasioned by fire or sparks from locomotives or other causes; it being the intent hereof that the lessee shall and does release and forever save and hold harmless the railroad company from all damages and claims for loss or injury suffered or sustained, or that may be suffered or sustained to said warehouse, elevator, fixtures, machinery, appliances or appurtenances, to grain or any other property contained at any time in said warehouse or elevator, or upon said premises.

The railroad agrees to nenew the lease if all business in and around the elevator shall have been transacted in a satisfactory manner to the railroad. The railroad shall at all times, by such agent or agents as it may order, have free access to said warehouse or elevator for the purpose of inspecting the books, papers and vouchers connected with the said business.

We know of no better way to comment on the absurdity of the foregoing lease than to present, as briefly as possible, the terms of a lease which was submitted to the Manitoba railroad by a gentleman, C. B. Benedict, of Polk County, who was desirous of building a farmer's warehouse and had been asked to sign the company's lease. The sarcasm in the following is very happy, and shows most clearly the embarrassing position any party, be it individual or railroad, would be in who became "the party of the second part," to instruments like either of those herein presented:

"This agreement, entered into between C. B. Benedict and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Company. Whereas, said Benedict is the owner of lands described, and the railroad company has constructed a road across said land without in any manner procuring the right of way thereto. It is hereby agreed by said Benedict that said company may use the right of way across said land, subject however to the following conditions: The said Benedict shall have the right to dictate the number of trains that shall pass over said land; the amount and kind of freight that shall be carried on said trains, and the rate of freight to be charged therefor. Also the persons to be employed on such trains and the amount of wages to be paid such persons. Said Benedict shall have the right at any and all times during the continuance of this agreement to inspect the books of said railway company, to see if the same are kept in a satisfactory manner. Said Benedict may, in his discretion, at the expiration of said term give to said company a further lease of said land, but said Benedict shall in no case reduce the president or other officers of said railroad to involuntary, perpetual servitude, unless he sees fit so to do. Said railroad company agrees to fulfill in every particular the conditions upon which this lease is made."

Merry Christmas!

Christmas! the day of cordial greetings, of celestial good will, of merry feastings, of cheerful and generous giving! One of the most beautiful pictures we ever saw was a German engraving entitled "The Christ-Child Comes." Day when a divine spirit of friendliness pervades the earth, the one day in the year when care and worry are cast aside. How do you expect to spend it this coming week? Where do you expect to be? Perhaps with some gathering of happy friends far away, perhaps in your father's house, perhaps around your own fireside. Wherever it may be, "The Burlington" sends you its kindest wishes, and hopes the occasion may be a supremely happy one. If you have to make a Christmas journey, may you have the good luck to make it over the Burlington lines, and you may be sure of arriving at your destination speedily and safely, in comfort all the way. For tickets call on the local agent, and for further information address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

BOILED DOWN.

The Spellbinder.

Continued prosperity and cordial relations with all other nations.

American property rights in Peru to be guarded, also in Africa, where Portuguese agents have been infringers. The Nicaragua canal project to be promoted.

The Government has accepted an invitation to attend an International Congress at Brussells, which opened 16th November, to devise means to abolish the slave trade in Africa.

Republic of Hayti recognized. Venzuela claims in process of settlement.

Our judicial rights and processes in Corea should be strengthened. The jurisdictional treaty rights of the United States in Turkey are better defined. The rights of naturalized citizens should be better defined by international conventions.

Surplus in our treasury about 43 millions per annum at present, should be used by continued purchase of bonds, and prevented hereafter by abolishing internal revenue taxes on tobacco and spirits used in manufacturing and arts. Public funds should be withdrawn from banks very gradually.

Revision of the tariff recommended both as to administration and schedules. Uniformity of Valuations essential. The inequalities of the law should be adjusted, but the protective principle should be maintained and fairly applied to the products of our farms as well as our shops.

Bank circulation should be maintained.

Recommends such legislation as will make the gold and silver coins equal in commercial uses. Approves a bi-metallic currency.

Recommends coast defenses in our principal harbors.

Recommends annual encampment of National Guards in the coast works.

Recommends improvements of important rivers and harbors, and suggests that the money is of most value in those cases where the benefit is National.

Recommends establishment of Federal Courts of Appelate jurisdiction to relieve the Supreme Courts.

Trusts of monopolistic tendencies should be suppressed.

Recommends enlarging the pension list, to cover those who, honorably discharged, are now incapacitated by disease or casualty, from earning a living.

Urges better protection for railroad employes engaged in the dangerous service of braking and coupling cars.

Recommends a law officer for the Agricultural Department, and the transfer of the Weather Bureau from the War to the Agricultural Department, making it a purely civil organization.

Recommends stringent control and limitation of the liquor traffice in the district of Columbia.

Recommends legislation in aid of the World's Fair.

Stands by the Civil Service law, and insists on reform in its administration.

Advocates an educational bill, and appropriations be passed which will encourage local authorities without destroying efforts at self-help.

Insists that the colored man shall be protected in all his relations to the Federal Government and in his constitutional right to vote and have his ballot counted.

Recommends government aid or subsidizing of merchant vessels and ocean mail service, and adequate provision for a national reserve, and generally, a liberal, prompt and progressive policy in promoting all the means for facilitating trade and commerce with foreign countries.

Altogether one of the very best State documents ever sent to an American Congress.

The Record of Ten Years.

National Tribune.

In 1862 the men who lent the Government money to carry on the war, received in gold as interest $13,190,345. That year the men who had been crippled by the terrible fighting on the Peninsula, at Bull Run, Antietam, Fort Donelson, Shiloh and elsewhere, received in pensions 852,170 paper dollars, worth 88 cents each, or equivalent to $749,848 in gold. That is, in the direst need of the Nation, the money lenders drew from the Treasury as interest more than 17 times as much as was paid to maintain those who had been in the struggle.

In 1863 the interest paid the money lenders in gold was $24,729,701, while the broken warriors of Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, Stone River, Chickamauga and Mission Ridge received 1,078,518 paper dollars—worth that year, on an average, 69 cents—or an equivalent to $734,165 in gold. That is, the money-changers in the temple received 35 times as much as those who fell fighting for their safety.

In 1864 interest account was $53,685,422; while the pension agents doled out to those who were maimed by shot and shell in the Wilderness and on the Atlanta Campaign, 4,985,474 paper dollars—worth from 38 to 64 cents (average 49)—or equivalent to $2,441,846. That year the money-changers got 22 times as much as the disabled fighting men and the widows and orphans of the dead.

In 1865 the gold payments of interest had swelled to $77,396,090, while the pensioners received 16,347,621 paper dollars, worth from 43 cents before Lee's surrender, to 68 cents after the last gun was fired—average price during the year 63 cents—which would make the total payment equal to $10,298,988. The money-changers thus got 7½ times as much as the broken down volunteers and their dependent ones.

In 1866 the bondholders got $138,067,825 gold as interest. The pensioners got $15,606,550 in paper dollars, worth about 66⅔ cents—or $10,045,824. That is, during that year over 13 times as much was paid the men who lent the money, as interest, than was paid the men who gave limbs and health to save the country.

The next year, 1867, the money lenders were paid $143,781,592 in gold as interest, and the disabled soldiers received $20,936,552 in paper dollars. As these had now to be worth 72 cents, the gold value of the payment was $15,074,280, so that the money lenders received between nine and 10 times as much as the men who had saved the nation.

In 1868 the interest in gold paid the money lenders was $140,424,046, while the pensioners were given $23,782,387 paper dollars, worth then 71 cents—or $16,885,433 in all. Thus, in that year bondholders got nearly nine times as much as the men who were crippled or disabled in fighting to make the bonds worth their face in gold.

In 1869 the interest paid the bondholders—in gold—was $130,694,243, while the total payment to pensioners was $28,470,622—in paper dollars, then worth 75 cents—or $21,352,950 in gold. That year the money lenders received over six times as much as the veterans.

In 1870 the money lenders were paid as interest, in gold, $129,295,498, while pensioners were paid 28,340,202 paper dollars, worth 87 cents, or equivalent to $24,655,974. The bondholders therefore received nearly six times as much as the veterans.

In 1871 bondholders received in gold $125,576,566 as interest, while the pensioners were paid 34,443,895 paper dollars—worth 89 cents—or equivalent to $31,654,982 in gold. That is, the money lenders got four times as much as the veterans.

Thus, in the 10 years immediately following the opening of the struggle, the money lenders received in interest on their loans the enormous amount of $971,837,828 in gold, where the men who had suffered cruelly in body and health, and the widows and orphans of those who had fallen, had received, in gold value, but $133,891,800, or less than one-seventh the interest paid the money lenders.

Even this startling showing does not begin to tell the tenth of the advantages enjoyed by the men who lent money over those who gave the nation life, limbs, health and devoted service.

In all, the bondholders lent $2,383,033,325 in greenbacks. The average value of the greenback in those years was about 66⅔ cents, making the total gold value of their loans about $1,588,688,882. In 10 years they received in addition to the interest above stated $423,334,736 of the principal, making the total payment $1,395,172,564, or with the increase in the value of their bonds, more in gold than they had originally lent, and the bonds which they retained still exceeded in value that of their original loan.

In that decade alone, the profits to the bondholders approximated double the entire amount that has been paid to the pensioners in the 28 years which have elapsed since the first soldiers fell in defense of the nation's life.

For the New Year, Peterson's Magazine promises brilliantly. The January number is a success in every particular. It presents a most attractive appearance and a rich table of contents. It opens with several very fine steel and other engravings, and gives one of the handsomest colored designs for fancy work ever published in this country. Rebecca Harding Davis contributes "Mr. Mifflin's Theories," Howard Seely "A Romance of the Big Horn," Lucy H. Hooper "A Magnificent Marriage," and Frank Lee Benedict "Through an Accident;" all admirable stories, as would be expected from such well known authors. There are, besides, various interesting sketches, useful miscellaneous articles, and some capital poems. "Martha Washington's Watch," by Minna Irving, is the prettiest bit of verse to be found in any of the month's magazines. The fashion and household departments contain fresh attractions, which add much to the value of this widely popular periodical. Every lady who desires a thoroughly good family magazine for 1890 should subscribe for "Peterson," the best and cheapest of all. Terms: Two dollars per year, with largely reduced rates when taken in clubs. Sample copy free to persons intending to get up clubs. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Horse's Legs Swell While in Stable--Lameness from Ringbone.

Toledo Blade.

Swelled or "filled legs" in the horse result at times from impaired action of the kidneys, but in many instances from impoverished condition of the blood. The blood gets thin and the circulation languid, when the legs—usually the hind ones, on account of their being the fartherest away from the central organ of circulation, and being besides dependent—become dropsical. To treat, give good hay and oats, good grooming and gentle exercise. Wrap the legs with flannel bandages while in the stable. Take of pure sulphate of iron, 1½ ozs., and nitrate of potash 2 ozs. Make into 12 powders. Give one morning and evening in the feed. You cannot feel assured that under any treatment the lameness of your horse will be entirely dissipated under any treatment, although by using the following relief will result, if the lameness does not entirely disappear: Take of oil of spike, 1 oz.; oil origanum, 2 ozs.; alcohol, 16 ozs.; iodine, ½ ounce. Rub well in twice a day.

We accordingly make a special but temporary offer. Every person who between this date and January 1st, 1890, sends the Daily News, St. Paul, Minnesota, the sum of ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF will receive the Daily News by mail for one year. This is less than one-half a cent per day.

The Daily News is published every week day evening. It is a four page paper, eight columns to the page, five days in the week; and on Saturdays an eight page paper, eight columns to the page.

It makes a specialty of market reports, giving the markets of the current day of issue. In cities and towns which we cannot reach by mail the same evening of the date of the paper, the mail will arrive during the night, so that the subscriber will find the News at the post office the next morning with as late market reports as will be supplied by the morning paper several hours later.

You can certainly secure the value of your subscription during the 313 week days of publication.

Remember the subscription price has not been permanently reduced, but still remains $1.00 for three months, or $4.00 per year. This is a special offer made with a view of securing a large circle of readers for 1890, and must be accepted by or before January first, next, in order to be secured.

Business men can send checks on their local banks for the amount, thus saving buying draft or postal note. The paper will be sent the first day your remittance is received and continue one year.

DO NOT FORGET THAT THE OFFER CLOSES JANUARY 1st, 1890.

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as ollows:

Each year on his insurance $88 44
Each year on his loan for interest....... 80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years.........1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest.......$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of......... 500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years....... 1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest.......$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years..... 1000 00
Total.......$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

Oh never mind the upstart "kickers." Let us have a good butter and egg market in Crookston. There's more money in that than in the whimsical growls of the old mossbacks who wouldn't agree to spend a dollar for the good of the city least neighbor Jones might have a smoke-house—that ought to be used for another purpose.

The Times man proves our assertion in regard to himself true by flying into a white heat and wildly raving instead of trying in a manly way to prove that we were mistaken. The question as to whether the Times man has always lived a strictly moral life, whether every thing he has done would bear the light of day is not the question at issue at all. What the people want is a market for butter and eggs, a starch factory, a paper mill, a grist mill, another saw mill and such other manufactories as will add to our growth and the spleen of the Times man will hardly prove an acceptable substitute.

On Friday evening as Knute S. Aker, of the town of Hubbard was driving under the railroad on Sixth street his team took fright at a passing train and started to run. He had a lumber wagon with a high box and Mr. S. Swenumson, of Park River, N. D., was with him on the seat. The team ran to the corner of Sixth and Main where the wagon upset throwing both men out on their heads. Mr. Aker held on to the team and succeeded in preventing a runaway. Mr. S. was taken up insensible and taken to a hotel where he shortly recovered. Both men were about town on Saturday looking very much the worse for wear, Mr. Aker having one eye swelled nearly shut. They were glad however that it was no worse than that.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

The Crookston, Ft. Stevenson & Montana Railroad.

Encouraged by the success of the new D., C. & N. R. R., Crookston comes to the front with a new railroad. Its incorporators are John Cromb, M. R. Brown, Felix Fournet, Louis Ellington, A. M. Stewart, Henry Burkhardt and John McLean. The incorporators propose to build a line of road from Crookston to Ft. Stevenson, and will ask the city for a bonus of $25,000. In case of the defeat of the bonds now in litigation the company will ask that they be voted to the new road, $25,000 to be given the city for manufacturing purposes, Should this road be built it cannot but result in the establishing division headquarters at Crookston.

T. O. Bergland called at our office on Tuesday and said he had just got back from Hueter's mill at Red Lake Falls where he had 45½ bushels of wheat floured for which he paid $5.70 cash. He received

1382	lbs of flour, worth	$31 30
93	" " middlings, worth	1 00
400	" " shorts, worth	2 00
815	" " bran, worth	3 50
	Total	$37 80

It will be observed that the total weight shrank just 40 lbs. for dirt or less than one pound per bushel. In this market, Mr. B. says the same wheat is docked four lbs. per bushel, sold in this market it would have brought $25.50, after paying for grinding, his load is worth $32 10, or $6.60 cents more than if sold in the market. He thinks that a shrinkage of over $13.20 on every hundred bushels is rather steep but that is light compared to some deals that have been made.

Jens Walbeck was in from the farm near Fisher on Tuesday, and meeting him on the street the old man grasped us warmly by the hand and said: "I heartily endorse all THE JOURNAL has said on the subject of a farmers' alliance; I believe it is the proper thing to do, in fact the only thing to do, and it is plain to everybody that something must be done, and that very soon. Keep on in the good work and we will stay by you!"

Did it ever occur to the mind of the average citizen that a butter and egg market would be a good thing for this city? We have been persistently told that we have one—but that don't make it so, only proves how unreliable is the source of the information; but we have now an opportunity to secure such an institution, a party standing ready to build a cold storage house and give bonds to maintain a market for a period of years if a little encouragment is given. Do we want it or shall we let it go to Grand Forks because neighbor Jones has built a smoke-house here a few years ago. There is no doubt but what Grand Forks would gobble it up too quick if the same proposition was made to her that has been made to Crookston. There is no earthly reason why Crookston should not become the leading city of the Northwest if her citizens only will it. It will take some money and a great deal of energy but she has natural facilities that with these adjuncts will bring her to the front.

The St. Paul Daily News is one of the best, if not the very best, of St. Paul's excellent evening papers. JOURNAL readers now have an opportunity to secure it for a song. For all of our subscribers who are in arrears and who pay up said arrearages and one year in advance we will send the St. Paul Daily News and THE JOURNAL for $2 50. Now is your time.

While the fortunate dweller in Polk County is basking under semi Italian skies, rejoicing in the possession of the finest weather in America, the poor deluded victims of misplaced confidence who sought a fairer clime in far off Washington are up to their eyes in mud and it is rain, rain, rain every day until one must needs become web-footed to fit himself to circumstances.' Occasionally we see a letter from some pilgrim and they all bear the same burden—"rain and mud." As a rule the writer says: "This is a delightful country containing more climate to the cubic inch than anywheres I ever went: When it is good it is very very good, and—if it was only good all the year round, and if we could raise to perfection every grain, fruit or vegitable in the known world, and if everybody could find plenty to do at big wages, and if, and if, and if, said the lawyer, we would be fairly well contented here." Polk County can not boast of being a paradise on earth, but everything considered she can come as near it as any place on earth, with her wealth of fertile soil and her healthy climate than which there is no more healthy to be found. As to the financial condition it is far better than almost every new country, and less distress prevails than in many sections very much older, while every year added facilities for transportation are gradually bettering it. As every country has its drawbacks it strikes us as a poor policy to leave the ills we know to fly to far greater ones that we know not by experience. We have the testimony of all those "loved ones gone before" that they have not reached the mellenium and this should be sufficient for us who long for it. "Let well enough alone" is a very good saying and while we are well enough off in this country it is better to await the good time coming here, than to go to any country already overcrowded and expect to better ourselves.

for one year for only two dollars and fifty cents! This offer holds good until January 1st, 1890.

Since the meeting of Dec. 9th THE JOURNAL has taken occasion to interview every farmer we have met on the question of forming a farmers' alliance and every one has expressed himself heartily in favor of it. In order to form a county alliance under the auspices of the state alliance, as we understand it there must be five township alliances in the county. We are told that there is one at Mentor, one at McIntosh and two in towns on the west side. We believe there is an old organization at Euclid. If this should be waked up and got in shape by the time appointed for the next meeting, Jan. 6th then a county central alliance could be organized if deemed advisible. We are now in correspondence with the State Lecturer and we hope to be able to bet him up here on the day of that meeting to give us a talk, shall know by next issue probably. Meanwhile farmers could think the matter over and if they decide to organize they should resolve to go into it for business for only in that way can any good ever come of it. Everyone should feel a personal interest in the matter and work to the extent of his ability for the good of the order. No man should take hold of it with a view to making it a political stepping stone and if such should be the case he should be drummed out of camp. Every farmer, of whatever party he belongs to should join to work for the common good.

To the Hon. President and City Council:

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith return without approval a resolution adopted by your body at your regular meeting of December 10th. While I have no objection, and would readily approve that portion containing the resolution proper, the "whereas" preceding the same, in my judgment, unnecessarily reflects upon the gentlemen named, which I deem a sufficient reason for withholding my approval.

A. D. STEPHENS, Crookston, Minn.

Our people all regret the defeat of Hon. H. Steenerson for District Attorney.

The Globe is exercising its mind considerably on the Gubernatorial xuestion. Never you mind, Mr. G. we will take care of such matters. Don't ret.

Senator Washburn is quoted as having said that his reasons for not supporting Hon. H. Steenerson, for U. S. Dist. Att'y is that Steenerson is not a representative Norwegian. Is it not possible that Washburn may be mistaken?

The Grand Army boys, as well as his hundreds of other friends, will be pleased to learn that Commander A. Barto has been appointed register of the St. Cloud Land office. It is a worthy appointment. Someday we would like to support him for Congress.

Doc Ames has been very sick again with his old kidfiey trouble. The papers reported him very low at one time but the genial doctor is now reported better and seems to be getting around once more. He has the wishes of many friends for his speedy recovery.

Evidently Senator Washburn believes in making Hay while the sun snines. Hay is an Indiana man and gets away with the District Attorney plum. The Fifth District asked it for one of its representative lawyers—but he was not an Indiana man. The Fifth District seems to be out of luck all round.

THE JOURNAL was favored with a visit from Chas. S. Fee, Gen'l Passenger Agent, and S. L. Moore, Gen'l Freight Agent N. P. R. R., on Saturday of last week. These gentlemen were looking over the city with a view to business for their company and were much pleased with our appearance. They appeared very anxious that the farmers' interests should be as fully protected in every particular as any other class, recognizing the fact that what is to the farmers interests is for the interest of the road. Mr. Moore said that he thought that the elevators should be protected, as that, in his judgment, would foster competition. We agree with him that an elevator is a convenience in the matter of handling wheat, but it is only one item in the list and should not be protected by a tariff on the producer. For instance, if a farmer desires to ship his wheat himself he should not be obliged to pay as much for transportation as though he had shipped through an elevator. If the railroad includes in his bill 2½ cents for elevator charges, that is an undue protection to the elevator system, and every cent the farmer loses or makes per bushel these times, counts. There is no danger of the elevator system being driven out of business because they have to take even chances with farmers or other shippers. They are generally a shrewd lot of men, fully capable of looking after their own interests in any emergency, and do not need special protection. If any one needs that it is the man who, busy with the cares incident to raising wheat, does not make the shipping of it a study, and who does not wish to ship it himself if he can avoid it. If the railroads are in earnest in this matter they can do a great deal toward furnishing relief by refusing to protect elevators by a tariff on the farmer. We do not object to a reasonable charge for handling grain, but a system that allows the elevator man to pay for his house every year is unjust to the producing classes.

HIGH FARMING AND BIG PROFITS.

THE REMARKABLE RESULTS IN THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURILT PRIZE CROP COMPETITION—A REVOLUTION IN THE CULTURE OF POTATOES, CORN, WHEAT AND OATS.

A sensation in the Agricultural world will be created by the experience the past year of a host of the best farmers throughout the United States and the Canadas in competing for prizes amounting to about $10,000, offered by the old standard farmers' magazine, the American Agriculturist, of New York. There were four grand prizes of $500 in gold for the largest yields of wheat, oats, corn and potatoes on one exact acre, and many minor prizes. Ample provision was made for securing honesty throughout the contest, areas and yields being carefully supervised by sworn witnesses. Their certificates accompanied the official book for reports, in which contestants recorded every detail of culture.

The potato competition was participated in by thousands, but potato blight swept the whole country at the height of the growing season, reducing the yield from one-half to four-fifths. In spite of this unavoidable disaster, a large number of complete reports have been submitted. The American Agriculturist to-day completed the award, with the following astonishing result:

Grand prize, $500 in gold, to Charles B. Coy, Aroostook County, Maine, for a yield of 738½ bushels of Dakota Red potatoes on a fraction under one acre, dressed with one ton of Stockbridge potato manure, seed cut to two eyes and dropped in hills 1x2¾ feet, on clay loam land for six years previous in grass without manure of any kind. The principal other prizes were given as follows: 2, to Alfred Rose, Yates Co., N. Y., 670 bushels of Early Peruvian, Sunlit Star and Early Ontario, cut to two eyes, planted 9x18 inches on sandy loam enriched with a ton of Mapes potato manure; 3, Fred S. Wiggin, Aroostook County, for 497½ bushels Dakota Red seed cut to one eye and planted on fertilizer; 4. J. H. Hitchcock, Wabasha County, Minn., for 532½ bushels Empire State from seed cut to one size and fed with commercial fertilizer; 5, Delano Moore, Aroostook County, 523 bushels Dakota Red cut half and whole and manured with Quinnipiac potato phosphate; 6, R. C. Nisbit, Rio Grande Co., Colorado, 492 bushels on barnyard manure; 7, I. D. Roberts, San Louis, Obispo County, California, 478 bushels of Peerless, with no manure or fertilizer; 8, J. M. Ogle, King County, Washington, 460 bushels on fertilizer; 9, W. C. Cusick, Union County, Oregon, 428 bushels, also on fertilizer.

The average crop of the prize winners was 500 bushels, and of the first one hundred contestants was 361 bushels per acre, while the average crop of the whole country was only 76 bushels. This shows how good farming pays. The contest also settles what has heretofore been in controversy, that high-grade complete potato fertilizers are better and more profitable for this crop than stable manure. Much light is also thrown upon mooted ways of cutting the seed, and many other points. A summary of nearly 100 of the best crops will appear in the American Agriculturist for January, together with the complete story of the grand prize yield.

The $500 in the oat class went to Orleans County, New York, for a yield of 135 bushels. The wheat award is to be announced in the February issue of the magazine, and the result with corn in March. The latter is awaited with peculiar interest by both practical farmers and agricultural scientists, because chemical tests of the amount of water in the crop are being made in each case together with numerous complete analysis to ascertain the feeding and manural value of corn under the differences in variety, climate and culture which prevail in this country. These comprehensive investigations are being conducted through the co-operation of the various State and national experiment stations, and promise to be the most extensive and practically valuable application of science to ordinary farming.

The American Agriculturist says the whole affair is a remarkable instance of the intelligence and progressive spirit of the mass of American farmers, that such an enterprise would be impracticable in any other country, and that it is designed to have a marked effect upon the agriculture of the next decade, and enable farmers to greatly increase their profits.

THE WHEAT QUESTION.

Kittson County Enterprise.

For some time past the Enterprise has in different ways and at different times mentioned the condition of the wheat market at Hallock and other points along the road. Neither has it been our intention to censure any local buyers because they have not kept up the market, yet W. L. Beaton feels agrieved and why he should shoulder the Red River Valley market is a query yet unsolved. The wheat question of to-day begins to take on a serious attitude, and it may as well be met fairly and squarely as any other way. It is a conceded fact on the part of the elevator men in Hallock that they, owing to the grading, cannot compete with the points on the Northern Pacific, and it looks as though there was a nigger in the fence somewhere; and just where the chap is located would be a great source of satisfaction to the wheat producers and grain buyers of Northern Minnesota. As to the combine of the elevator system there is no doubt whatever, and the illustrious board of Railroad and Warehouse Commissioners are snaring in the "rake off." This is saying considerable, you may think, but wait till we look a little further into the matter. In the first place wheat that last year would pass as No. 1 hard, goes below and is as liable to go rejected or No. 3, as anything else. Wheat out of the same bins have been sent to the markets, all loaded at the same time and place, and raised on the same land. One car would go No. 2 northern and the other "off grade." From the books and returns of the wheat buyers, anyone can see they have been grading as high as they could and have then lost a grade or two when wheat would reach the market. From railroad agents at Drayton and Hallock we are informed that the rate from both points are 19 cents per hundred, and the only way this little conundrum can be solved is this: The elevator system combines against local buyers, and the illustrious Grain Commissioners sit back and watch the proceedings, and the railroad companies are giving rebates to those in the "ring," and the buyer who happens to be on the outside can just whistle to himself, for he gets no benefit. To show more fully that there is something in this deal, we cite our readers to the experience of Eklund Bros. who began buying at Drayton. That firm was refused cars, and when asked the reason were informed that the "company was afraid the elevator folks might not like it." At Drayton they are paying no higher price for wheat than in Hallock, but the difference is in the grade, which is higher. Now it seems high time that something was done. There is no denying the fact that the present system of grading wheat is ruining our market and injuring our town as a whole. You ask what is to be done? That is a question not so easily solved. It was supposed when the republican administration conceived this commissioners scheme that the offspring might prove beneficial, but if their actions the past three years are anything to go by, this state has seen enough of such ring rule, and want to see this new fangled system of paying rich men a salary out of a poor man's pocket forever abolished. Would it not be a good idea to have a committee appointed and wait on these moguls in their elegant parlors in St. Paul and give them to undersand the people of Northern Minnesota are not as big fools as they look, and demand justice and right at their hands. Governor Merriam also claims to be willing to help the farmer, and if he does, the opportunity is given now. Let the wrong be made right at the fountain head where it belongs.

CROOKSTON, MINN., DEC. 19, 1889.

Primary Tariff Topics.

The Toledo Blade.

A resident at Plainfield, Ill., sends us a number of primary questions on the tariff, to which he desires full answers. The Blade cheerfully complies with his request, believing that many more who have not made a study of the matter may possibly be tussling with the same problems he propounds:

"If the farmer has equal protection with the manufacturer, why should the manufactures be growing richer and the farmer growing poorer?

If protection is the means of paying high wages to the laboring men, why don't the laboring men Germany and France, where they have a high protective tariff, get bigger pay than they do in free trade England?

Which would be the best way to reduce the surplus—by making extravagant appropriations, or by revision of the tariff, reducing the revenue to the needs of the government, putting the necessaries of life on the free list and relieving the people of some of the burdens and taxes?"

The farmer is protected against his foreign competitor as much as is the manufacturer. It is a fallacy that the manufacturer is growing richer, while the farmer is growing poorer. The net profit of manufacturing in the United States—an average, of course—is 7 per cent. That is not an exorbitant rate, surely. The reason that farmers are not making as much profit as they should is simply because the world is producing more grain each year than it consumes. In such a case, there is no possible way that the prices can be higher. Neither the tariff nor free trade can push up the price of wheat in the face of an overplus. This topic was fully discussed in the Weekly Blade of Oct. 31, under the head of "Our Farm Surplus," to which our correspondent is referred.

As to the second point, our friend is mistaken in saying that Germany and France have high protective tariffs. He is, we suspect, using phrases without attaching due meaning to them. Neither country has a tariff which is completely protective; they are protective on some articles, and merely revenue on others. Neither has as complete a tariff as our own. And it is to be remembered that we have had protection for 28 years, while these two countries have not had the system in operation nearly so long. The effect of a protective tariff is not instant and immediate upon wages. In this country, the regular increase of wages can not be systematically shown since the adoption of the Morrill tariff bill in 1861, because the war, and the expansion of the currency, deranged all values; nor did we reach a peace basis as to prices and wages until after the resumption of specie payments in 1878. Since that time, however, there has been not only a progressive increase in the average rate of wages paid workingmen, but there has been a decline in the prices of the necessaries of life, so that the purchasing power of each dollars has been largely increased.

But our friend will note that the comparison of wages between this country and Germany and France has nothing to do with the real question at issue, viz: Shall we cut down the wages of every laboring man in the United States, in order to allow foreign manufacturers to absorb an home market? For it is an admitted fact—admitted even by all honest free traders—that the only reason England can make goods cheaper than ourselves is because the cost of the necessary labor is only about one-half what we pay here. To cut the tariff down to a revenue basis—which is what is meant by "free trade," as the term is commonly used—simply means that we will either buy all such goods of English manufacturers, or else that our workingmen men must accept the English rate of wages, if our own manufacturers are to attempt to compete.

Again: In the latter case, it is not alone the men engaged in protected industries whose wages would be cut down. It was proved in 1873, as it has been in every period of "hard times," that if wages suffer a large reduction in one line of manufacture, they tumble everywhere. Not only the men in mills and factories and foundries suffer, but the reduction cuts also the stipend of every man who works for wages or on salary —the clerks in counting-rooms and behind the counters, the railway employes, the men who are employed at all kinds of common labor. It is plain to every thinking man that such a cut in wages would seriously reduce the ability of our millions of wage-workers to purchase, and hence a period of depression, stagnation, and "hard times" set in whose end no one could foresee.

As to the last query of our correspondent, we wish to say emphatically that we know of no sane man who proposes to "reduce the surplus" by "extravagant appropriations." Nobody talked of such a thing except Democratic campaign orators last year, who accused the Republicans of it. Our friend should have too much sence to give any credence to such a silly cry.

The tariff does not produce enough for the needs of the government. For the fiscal year 1888, the total expenditures were $267,924,801. The tariff revenue was only $219,091,174. The remainder needed, and the surplus, was produced by internal revenue taxation chiefly, with a few minor items. The tax to cut off is the burdensome internal revenue tax, the only relic of "war taxes" left. The tariff is not a "war tax."

The Blade believes that the protective principle must be retained. No law is perfect, and the tariff law is no exception. We favor its revision; but in the way of removing its inequalities and adjusting it to the changed conditions in certain lines of manufactured productions. The duty on every article that we can produce or manufacture here should measure, as nearly as can be ascertained, the difference between the cost of production abroad. As to the gabble about "putting the necessaries of life on the free list," the bulk of our imports are of articles on the free list—which our friend does not seem to know. And he does not remember, also, that the tariff is neither a "tax" nor a "burden" unless you buy imported goods. The duty on calico is from 4½ to 5 cents a yard. Good calico can be bought in any store in Toledo at 5 cents a yard. Does he think he pays 5 cents duty on it then? If he buys English-made calico at 10 cents a yard he pays the duty; but is not American calico good enough for him?

Happy New Year.

The year 1889 has almost run its course. A new decade is soon to be ushered in. "The Burlington" takes advantage of its last speech for the year to wish its legions of patrons and all the people of the Northwest—Happy New Year! May it be pleasant and prosperous in all things, this coming year 1890, and a little selfishness in the wish makes it none the less sincere, for "The Burlington's" prosperity for the year will depend on the good or ill fortune of the good people of this grand Northwest. Heartily grateful for the magnificent share of public patronage that has kindly been accorded to it in the past, "The Burlington" hopes to give in every way a yet better service, and to merit and receive a still larger share of the railway travel. For tickets by this popular line, call on the local agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Minneapolis Evening Journal: Since the editor of the Polk County Herald interviewed Gov. Merriam and reported that the latter assured him that he would take action immediately when any country shipper was obstructed in the matter of getting cars, there have been loud calls for the Governor to reform the system of grading wheat. The Governor can, of course, help farmers a good deal by his influence, but it is asking a trifle too much of him to expect him to reconstruct the grading laws without the aid of the legislature.

As there is no such paper as the "Polk County Herald," we suppose the Evening Journal refers to our recent interview with Gov. Merriam in which he assured us that he would do all in his power to see that cars are furnished to all desiring them, and the fact that the Governor is besieged with cries for help—for relief from the one-sided grading system, shows only too well how much the producer is suffering under it and the urgent necessity for relief. Is it a matter of wonder that, like the drowning man, the farmer should grasp eagerly at any straw that promises relief? Does not the fact of these pathetic complaints besieging the seat of Government proclaim in thunder tones the damnable outrages committed under a system that always favors the buyer and never the producer, and call loudly for redress? Is a system that allows the buyer to steal a grade on wheat, the right one? Is a system that allows the buyer a clear profit of from 14 to 20 cents per bushel (the difference between No. 3 and rejected in the country market and the Minneapolis market) the right one? Is a system that is calculated to protect the elevators and obliges the producer to "take pot luck" to shift for himself the best he may, the right one? We, as farmers, do not understand all these chemical folderols, all those sophistries whereby the qualities of milling wheat is so learnedly set forth by the disciples of the system, but we do know enough to know that we are egregiously swindled in the deal, and that the miller and the buyer every year gets away with the profits on our wheat. It was the farmers who created that board for the express purpose of changing the deal, so that some of the profits of wheat-raising might fall to their share, and it is right for the farmers to appeal to the appointing power for help, for if our inspectors will not give us justice can he not "resign them" and put in their places men who will? We are told that the grades are very much "stricter" this year than last. The greater amount of kicking this year than last should convince any one who wants to know it that the system is wrong, is too "strict," and if the board really means to help the farmer, they should change it. When the Governor expressed so much interest in the welfare of the farmer as he did at our last interview, we believed that he was sincere—that he meant all he said and that he would do all he promised—we believe it yet, and these cries that are coming up to him from the people should give him pointers that will enable him to see something of the real situation and, perhaps, a way to remedy it. One great fault with the system is its cumberous, expensive machinery, the only object of which, as we can see, is to protect the interests of those who need it not; one good practical miller, who knows nothing at all about the chemical monkey-work applied to test the milling quality of wheat, can tell a farmer in a York minute what his wheat is worth to him for grinding, upon seeing a sample of it. Some other miller might think it worth more and offer more, if the farmer could get to him, but how is he ever to do that with the cumberous State machinery in the way? We do not believe that the law contemplates the fostering of a system that encourages the protection of the elevator man by a tariff on the producer, and the stealing of a grade, at least, from the producer. Under the system the elevator man is given an advantage of 2½ cents over other buyers, to start with, and his system of putting his buyers under bonds to make his grades hold out, offers a premium on dishonesty never calculated by the law. These are among the evils complained of by the farmers and which it is the business of the board to remedy in some way, and as long as they neglect to do so they are remiss in their duties to the farmers who, in addition to other burdens have to be taxed for their support. The Governor can look the matter up, and if, he finds the law inadequate, he can convene the Legislature so that a law can be made that will effect a cure.

However much of justice there may have been in the protection of elevators in their infancy, the fact is plain to-day that the system works incalculable injustice to the producer. In the start, the price of wheat was so much higher that this little act of favoritism was not felt as severely as during the past few years when the price has been so low. Now that the elevators have been paid for over and over again, it is time to call a halt on this protective business and give the producer an innings.

STATE FARMERS' BOARD.

The Scheme Outlined Fully by S. M. Owen.

THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

How They Would be Conserved---A Representative Body With Administrative Functions.

The Minneapolis Journal.

The proposed establishment of a state board of agriculture in Minnesota is likely to cause no little discussion before the next legislature meets. S. M. Owen, the editor of Farm, Stock and Home, is deeply interested in the matter and in conversation with a representative of The Journal outlined more in detail the plan.

"My idea is," said Mr. Owen, "that the agricultural forces of the State of Minnesota should be organized. I want to see the various organizations of the state that are interested in pursuits, allied to farming all in the hands of the board. That is, I would have this board of agriculture and then I would have all these bodies like the dairymen's organization, the horticulturists and the like merged into, or rather closely allied to the state board. It is said that we have no farmers that can run a board of this kind. Well, I hold that we can do no less than try the farmers and if they cannot manage a board devoted to interests of agriculture then it will be time enough to turn them out. We want the agricultural affairs of the state managed by farmers' brains."

"What as to the political bias of such an organization?"

"It must be absolutely and unqualifiedly non-partisan in the broadest sense of the word. Otherwise it would be of no effect whatever. We have the finest grounds for state fairs in the union; now I want to see an agricultural exhibition that will be worthy of the plant."

"What is your plan?"

"I would have a State Board of agriculture. This should be made up of 15 men chosen as congressmen are—by a certain appointment of population. Divide the state up into 15 districts. Then have each agricultural society in each district select three delegates to attend a general meeting. Let these delegates in convention assembled select the 15 members of the board. Five of the members of the board should be chosen for one year, five for two and five for three years. This board should be vested with powers from the legislature not only to manage the affairs of the state agricultural society but with power to do a large amount of other business in which the farmers of the state are interested. Among their duties would be the investigation of threatened grasshopper invasion, the allotment of seed wheat and, in behalf, all things requiring administrative action for the benefit of the agricultural element of the state. This board should assemble once a year and have a three-days' session, with a thorough discussion of subjects of interest to those whom they represented. They should have power to elect a president, first and second vice presidents from their own body and be empowered to hire a secretary. The board should be paid a per diem for actual service, and the president and secretary stated salaries."

"By this," continued Mr. Owen, "we get a board with larger honors, greater responsibility than any organization we now have in the state. There would be so much more weighty responsibilities resting upon them and they would necessarily be men selected for their fitness and not for any political reasons. In a word, such a board would stand sponsor for all measures on behalf of the farmers that might be proposed. It would be a body of strong, clear minded, intelligent men fully alive to the interests of the agriculture of the state."

A Surprise Party.

But Washburn Knew all About it---His Scheme.

Special to the Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—The Minnesota delegation is quite stirred up to-day over the nomination of Eugene G. Hay, which was sent to the senate by the president this afternoon. The appointment is quite a surprise to Senator Davis, who still hoped to succeed in his ambitions for Steenerson, of Crookston. Among the members of the house who have been quiet spectators of the fight, there was little surprise manifested. Washburn evidently knew what he was about when he declined Davis' proposition for a selection of new men outside of St. Paul and Minneapolis for their appointments.

The Prison Mirror: The buzz saws now singeth their song from morn to eve in the tub and pail factory cutting blocks and shaping them into staves and bottoms to be put in the dry kiln to season. The superintendent has an immense stock of material on hand, enough apparently to make tubs and pails to supply the whole Northwest for the next ten years.

Davis on the Appointment.

The Senior Senator Defines his Position Regarding the Office.

Special to the Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, 17.—Senator Davis was interviewed this afternoon by the Dispatch correspondent and asked about the appointment of Eugene G. Hay, to be United States District Attorney for Minnesota, Senator Davis said that the appointment was the president's. He (Mr. Davis) has advocated Mr. Steenerson's candidacy for the place both because of his ability to perform the duties of the office and also because his appointment would suit the state at large and satisfy a large republican constituency that had not received due recognition in the matter of federal appointments. "Moreover," the senator said, "Mr. Steenerson represents the very large Scandinavian element in the Fifth district, and he is also popular with other classes. Of course, I have nothing to say against Mr. Hay. I wanted this appointment and perhaps some others to go to persons outside the Twin cities, as seemed to me to be fair, all things considered.

Our Duty.

The Western Rural.

"Put out the signals for the other trains," was the language of the mangled dying railroad conductor in a wreck, and which Whittier made the basis for beautiful verse. It was the fidelity of the man even in death that charmed the poet. It was the man's thought for the safety of others that led him to forget his pains and with his dying breath say: "Put out the signals for the other trains." Each one of us owes a duty to ourselves, to the present, to the future and to God. There is something for every one of us to do. It is possible that we may not be able to do any great thing. We may not possess, the ability to write an article to make a speech to forward reform. We may be so near financial death that we have no money to aid in spreading the light. But we can say as much as the dying conductor said. We can say: Put out the signals for the other trains. Perhaps we can put out the signals ourselves. We can all vote for right men and right measures, if we can do nothing else, and that will be a signal. We may refuse to support candidates for office, or newspapers that are not friendly to us. That will be a signal and others seeing it may take warning. Our conduct as men and citizens may be one continuous signal even to posterity. Put out the signals for the other trains.

He's Doing Well,

Moorhead News.

Hon. S. G. Comstock has been given a place on the house committee on elections by Speaker Reed, which is a marked recognition of Mr. Comstock's ability as a lawyer, as that committee is regarded as one of the most important in the house. So far as it gives Mr. Comstock any increased advantages of serving his immediate constituents except in an indirect way, it is of very little importance, but it is an upward step and will serve to give Mr. Comstock standing in the house and before the country, as he will in all probability be assigned the charge of one or more important contested election cases, and their discussion on the floor will bring him into prominence. If he acquits himself as well as he always has done in the Minnesota legislature, he will make a good record in a brief space of time, an of this we entertain no doubt. If he also secures a place on the committee on rivers and harbors, he will have done exceedingly well for his firt term.

Hallock Enterprise: In Warren there is the same feeling in regard to the wheat market as in Hallock, if not worse. Wheat is going to the Northern Pacific road, a distance from Warren of over thirty miles, and on Tuesday a man went to the elevator and asked if they would not sell him a few thousand bushels of wheat, as he could put his teams hauling it over to Grand Forks and make fifteen dollars a day after buying it from the elevator. This is certainly a nice predicament the Red River Valley is in, and Governor Merriam and the Grain Commissioners had better see that this little matter is made right, the first thing they do.

Time Works Wonders.

The Holsteins are a great milk and cheese cattle, but when the claim is made for them of leading in butter-making, it is mythical and without foundation. The breed that excels all others in the yield of butter—"the best on earth"—is that from the Island of Jersey, bred and fed by intelligent and practical men for many generations, butter producing being the sole object. The Holsteins prior to six or eight years ago, made no pretentions whatever as great butter cows, and it is scarcely a reasonable supposition that in this brief period such wonders should be accomplished.—[Jersey Bulletin.

Right you are, good friend, the Holsteins are great milk and cheese cattle, and though it hurts too bad for you to say so, you might have added, and among the best in the world for butter, as demonstrated on every occasion when called upon, even in competition with the Jerseys. Don't you remember the New York Dairy Show and the famous cup prepared for a Jersey and won by a Holstein? The Mirror and Farmer makes a point and adorns it with a similar question. "In a three days' trial of dairy cows at the Nebraska State Fair, were six Holsteins, one of which was sick, and two Jerseys. Nip, a Jersey, made 3.03 lbs. of butter; Katrine, a Jersey, made 2.03 lbs; Empress Josephine 3d, Holstein, made 5.15 lbs.; Hortense, Holstein, made 4.43 lbs.; Blanch S., Holstein, (sick) made 2.29 lbs.; Jewel, Holstein, made 5.53 lbs.; Rijaneta, Holstein, made 5.88 lbs.; and Jewel 2d, Holstein, made 4.39 lbs. of butter in three days' test. How is it, we respectfully ask the Jersey Bulletin, that the Holsteins almost always come out ahead in these public tests, when in well attested private tests the Jerseys do so much better than they do in public?"—[Colman's Rural World.

A Wonderful Offer.

A St. Laul Daily Paper for One Yea for One Dollar and a Half.

The St. Paul Daily News, and independent Republican newspaper, desires to so extend its circulation that every man in the Northwest who reads a daily paper will peruse its columns,

We accordingly make a special but temporary offer. Every person who between this date and January 1st, 1890, sends the Daily News, St. Paul, Minnesota, the sum of ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF will receive the Daily News by mail for one year. This is less than one-half a cent per day.

The Daily News is published every week day evening. It is a four page paper, eight columns to the page, five days in the week; and on Saturdays an eight page paper, eight columns to the page.

It makes a specialty of market reports, giving the markets of the current day of issue. In cities and towns which we cannot reach by mail the same evening of the date of the paper, the mail will arrive during the night, so that the subscriber will find the News at the post office the next morning with as late market reports as will be supplied by the morning paper several hours later.

You can certainly secure the value of your subscription during the 313 week days of publication.

Remember the subscription price has not been permanently reduced, but still remains $1.00 for three months, or $4.00 per year. This is a special offer made with a view of securing a large circle of readers for 1890, and must be accepted by or before January first, next, in order to be secured.

Business men can send checks on their local banks for the amount, thus saving buying draft or postal note. The paper will be sent the first day your remittance is received and continue one year.

DO NOT FORGET THAT THE OFFER CLOSES JANUARY 1st, 1890.

Money to Loan

On More Reasonable and Better Terms than Ever Before Offered in the Northwest.

We are now prepared to loan money in any amount from $250 up to $10,000 on well improved farms where title has been perfected, and U. S. patent is on record or has been issued.

Our terms are 8 per cent. interest, with a small commission to cover expenses and cost of making the loan.

Where the security is satisfactory we can make loans for five or any greater number of years, interest payable annually on the first day of January, and will allow the borrower, after two years, to pay any part of the principal, in sums of $100 or upwards on any interest day named in his notes. So much for straight loans.

We are the agents for the Union Central Life Insurance Company, of Cincinati, Ohio, a company of great strength, and a public record for probity and fair dealing unsurpassed; and can write life insurance in connection with loans with great profit and advantage to the borrower, which, taken in connection with the loan for ten years, pays the loan by yearly payments, which is more fully shown by the following statement: A. aged 25 years, of sound health, applies for a loan of $1,000 on his farm, at the same time he applies for $1,000 insurance on the 10 years annual payment stock-endowment plan. He pays as ollows:

Each year on his insurance $88 44
Each year on his loan for interest........................ 80 00
Total yearly payments...$ 168 44
Total for ten years..........1684 40

which pays up for the insurance, and the insurance pays the loan in full.

If the borrower dies during the ten years his insurance becomes payable and due at once and pays his loan in full, leaving his farm clear and free of all encumbrances, for his family.

NOTE THE DIFFERENCE.

If the borrower effects a loan of $1,000 on the plan usually followed, he must pay interest at the rate of ten per cent. and may be stated as follows:

$1,000 for five years, annual interest..............................$ 100 00
At the end of the loan he pays interest in the sum of.......... 500 00
When the loan is due he pays.. 1000 00
Principal and interest paid in 5 years.............................. 1500 00

As much within $184 40 as he pays in ten years with insurance with us.

If he makes such a loan for ten years he pays:

Interest.......................................$1000 00
Principal at end of 10 years..... 1000 00
Total.................... ....$2000 00

or $315.60 more than he would pay with us; besides on the 10 per cent. plan he is not insured against death, and if he dies during the life of the loan the "Old Detestable Mortgage" still hangs over the heads of his defenceless wife and children.

Kittson County Enterprise: Will. and George, sons of the Hon. G. R. Roberts, have invented an adjustable horse shoe which may prove a bonanza. The shoe is composed of two parts connected with a hinge in front and a set-screw behind. A flange clasps the hoof and with the set-screw may be tightened to any desired extent. They have made a practical test of the shoe and say that it works perfectly. It does away with the use of nails in the hoof and the idea is very simple. A patent has been applied for.

THE FIRST

Fatal Accident on the D., C. & N. R. R.

At 5:30 on Monday evening an accident occurred at the new Y, on the Sam Greenhalgh place, by which John Barlund, an employe on the gravel train, lost his life. It seems they were intending to leave the caboose on the main track while they were unloading the flats on the Y. Burland jumped from the caboose to a flat after the coupling pin had been removed, and had he remained quiet would have been all right, but for some unaccountable reason he attempted to jump back upon the caboose. The distance was too great and he fell upon the track in front of the flats, a car and a half passing over his legs. He was taken up as tenderly as possible, placed in the caboose and brought to town and men at once dispatched for a doctor. Dr. Denniston was found who reached the man's side a few minutes after six and found the man in a dying condition. He died about 6-30. The body was conveyed to the Crookston Furniture Co's undertaking rooms to be prepared for burial, and on Tuesday was sent to the home of his parents at Union Lake, in the town of Garden. Martin Barlund, brother of deceased, was with him at the time, saw him jump and fall, but was powerless to prevent the accident. Mr. Barlund retained consciousness up to within a few minutes of his death, clasping the hand of his brother in a loving farewell and offered his hand to the foreman, Mat Taghe, who was so overcome that he could not grasp the poor, trembling hand. The remains will be buried from the home of his parents to whom his home-coming will make indeed a sad Christmas.

LATER:—An inquest upon the body of John Barlund was decided upon and on Tuesday morning Coroner Shepard impannelled the following jury: M. R. Brown, John Hack, Henry Nolan, M. C. Malone, Dan. McDonald and Frank Jerome. The jury met in the morning, took the deposition of Martin Barlund, brother of deceased and one or two others, and then adjourned till 2:30, in order to get the testimony of the trainmen. The testimony of the conductor went to show that the work was being performed in the customary way, and that of brakesman Gentry confirmed it. Brakesman W. J. Glass testified that he saw the accident; that the man ran out of the caboose and jumped upon the flat car; there was, perhaps, a foot or two space between the bumpers when he jumped; he ran up on the gravel load perhaps five or six feet and turned about, facing the caboose; remained a second or two then started back evidently intending to jump back to the caboose; he took two or three steps and seemed to hesitate about jumping, but too late, as he half fell and half rolled off the car about where the brake would have been in the late style of flat cars; the car was an old style side brake; the brake is from five to six feet from the hind end, on the side; cautioned the section foreman about the men rushing out so before the train stopped; saw the man fall and signalled the engineer to stop; saw the wheels passing over him; when train stopped ran back to him, he was lying under the last wheels of the second car; the wheels were between his legs; think the body was rolled over in extricating him; helped to get him out and carry him to the caboose; am a new man on this branch, this was my first trip. After due consideration the jury rendered a verdict to the effect that the trainmen were doing their work properly and in the usual way and fully exonerating the railroad company from any blame in the matter.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Directors of the Duluth & Winnipeg Elected.

DULUTH, Special to Pioneer Press, Dec. 20.—The annual meeting of the Duluth & Winnipeg road was held here to-day. The out-of-town stockholders present were Sir Roderick Campbell of New York and W. Barr of St. Paul, others being represented by proxies. The following directors were chosen:

A. P. Wright, C. W. Wells, Saginaw; T. B. Casey, Minneapolis; W. H. Fisher, St. Paul; E. D. Childs, Crookston; Sir Roderick Campbell, New York; Donald Grant, Faribault; J. Boardman, Boston; R. S. Munger, Duluth.

A meeting of the construction company was also held. It was practically decided to push the road through to the Manitoba boundary so trains could be running soon after Jan. 1, 1891. New capital and lots of it is reported to have been secured for the company and there is now almost unlimited means back of it. Messrs. F. W. Coleclugh and C. H. Allen of Winnipeg were here conferring with the Duluth & Winnipeg people. They are to take hold of the construction of a road from Winnipeg to the boundary to meet the Duluth & Winnipeg.

The Exemption Law of Minnesota.

Herewith we give the exemption laws of the State so that all may see what are their rights thereunder:

Every man who is in debt in Minnesota should understand clearly, that under the laws of the State, meant for the protection of the people, and to prevent them from being reduced to pauperism, the following property cannot be sold under any execution for any debt, of any kind whatever, issuing out of any court of this State:

1. Eighty acres of land and all improvements thereon, outside of any city, town or village; the homestead right to belong to the widow and children after the death of the owner. The owner may forfeit the land, however, if he gives a mortgage on it, signed by his wife; and a mortgage given without the wife's signature is valid, if given for part of the purchase money of the land. This 80 acres belongs to the owner; and unless he signs it away he can defy the world to touch it, even though he owes a million dollars.

2. All wearing apparel of the debtor and his family, all beds, bedsteads, bedding, kept and used by the debtor or his family; all stoves and appendages, put up or kept for the use of the debtor and his family; all cooking utensils, and all other household furniture not herein enumerated, not exceeding $500 in value.

3. "Three cows, ten swine, one yoke of oxen and a horse, or in lieu of one yoke of oxen and a horse, a span of horses or mules; twenty sheep, and the wool for the same, either in the raw material or manufactured into yarn or cloth; the necessary food for all the stock mentioned in this section for one year's support, either provided or growing or both as the debtor may choose, also, one wagon, cart or dray, one sleigh, two plows, one drag and other farming utensile, including tackle for teams, not exceeding three hundred dollars in value."

4. "Provisions for the debtor and his family, necessary for one year's support, either provided or growing or both, and fuel necessary for one year."

5. "Necessary seed grain for the actual personal use of the debtor for one season, to be selected by him, not however, in any case to exceed the following kinds and amounts respectively, viz.: 50 bushels of wheat, 50 bushels of oats, 15 bushels of potatoes, 3 bushels of corn and 30 bushels of barley."

6. A family Bible; a sewing machine; a reaper; "family pictures, school books, a library, and musical instruments for the use of the family;" a pew in a church, and a lot in a burial ground.

A. D. STEPHENS, Crookston, Minn

Senator Washburn spends the holidays at home.

Hon. S. G. Comstock has been placed upon two important committees, elections, and coinage, weights and measures. While we hoped to see him on the committee on rivers and harbors, yet he can be of great assistance to us where he is—and he will, never fear.

No matter what Mr. Loren Fletcher may say to belittle Joel P. Heatwole, Mr. Heatwole represents the sentiments of a large majority of the people of Minnesota when he condemns the disposition to ignore the country in the matter of appointments.

Elmer E. Adams, the energetic Fergus Falls Journal man, has been appointed census boss for this district. Thus it sometimes happens that the poor but honest newspaper man comes to the front, and next to having ourself remembered occasionally, it gives us great pleasure to offer our congratulations to Adams. He will be a good man for the place.

We respectfully call the attention of Senator Washburn to the following clipping from the Northfield News. Perhaps it escaped his notice, or he may imagine their memory is not as long as their lives:

"The Norwegians are said to be the longest lived people in the world. Official statistics show that the average duration of life in Norway is 48.33 for men, 51.80 for the women and 49.70 for both sexes. The duration of life has increased of late years."

Hon. Loren Fletcher is reported to have opened his mouth very wide and put his foot squarely into it in an interview recently. That is very unlike "Your Uncle Loren" who is not generally given to "talking with his mouth" the first you know about what he is going to do he has up and done it—but something unusual seems to have got crosswise in his internal organism to put him in such a fearful pet as to lead him to score Steenerson so unmercifully, and this reminds us that once upon a time Steenerson took occasion, in a political speech in St. Paul to say something about the peculiar methods of some old mossback politicians who go creeping about with pussy-cat like tread, with coat-tails softly sweeping in the dirt—or words to that effect implying an underhand method of conducting politics. Wonder if "your Uncle Loren" thought Steenerson referred in that speech to him? He was there and heard it and if he thought that was his picture so accurately drawn we don't wonder that he is so hot in the collar. Well, Steenerson is alive yet and if he should ever happen to catch "your Uncle Loren" "in the swim" again he may give him such a roasting as will leave little doubt of his meaning—or come as near it as he can.

Gosh! He's a Whale!

The editor of the Great West modestly calls himself a fish—E. W. Fish. Anybody who has seen any issue of the Great West can't help but see by the way he is walloping the big corporations who are absorbing the wealth of the country, that he is a veritable whale. We advise our farmer readers, who have never before seen these institutions thoroughly whaled, to send to 758 Wabasha street, St. Paul, for a sample copy of the Great West, or call at this office and look over our files of that paper. We will supply it and THE JOURNAL to all new subscribers for Two Dollars a year in advance.

In his efforts in behalf of the "common people" Cushman K. Davis seems to have lost ground with some of the aristocratic snobs of an American nobility—but never mind the common people have a chance to be heard occasionally where it counts and these who think they have snatched the old man bald headed in the first round will some day tumble to their little mistake. Cush Davis is all right; don't let that escape your memory!

The St. Paul Dispatch complacently remarks that the rural roosters are all right—"the cities have got all the fat appointments and we do not see any objection raised by the country press, &c" well, that's right in so far as the appointments are concerned but as to the "kicking," ah, that's quite a different matter that we are not so sure about. At present "kicking" is useless but you just wait, Mr. Dispatch, wait until the country gets its innings again and then if you are not perfectly satisfied as to the "kicking" you just write and let us know; providing always that the "rural roosters" continue to be completely ignored. They don't have to continue an autocratic oligarchy in power and you can safely bet all you owe they will not.

Great West: Railroad fighting and a scarcity of whiskey don't seem to have ruined Iowa. Here's what the American Banker says of that state for the past year:

"There are fifty savings banks with total assets of $17,185,340.19 and eighty-one state banks with total assets of $18,170,103.14. At the close of the previous biennial period, two years ago, there were but thirty-seven savings banks and sixty-five state banks with total assets of $22,942,654.13, as against $30,855,448.83 now. The large increase in the assets of savings banks, amounting to over $4,500,000 during the last two years, is an indication of a healthy condition of business in Iowa."

Northfield News: There are thousands of Republicans in Minnesota who cannot be bound and gagged for men to trample upon at will. The time is almost here when manhood must be asserted and a fearless expression to convictions be given. The Republican party was founded on principle and not for the purpose of being used by mere persons as a tool to subserve purely personal and selfish ends. The News is inclined to believe that there are too many good and true men left to permit the greediness of the twin cities to bind the Republican party hand and foot.

The Great West.

"If you have a little farm or business, and are out of debt, don't fret and work yourself and good wife into the grave for the sake of making money. You have but one life to live and that is very brief at best. Take a little comfort and pleasure as you go along day by day, and try to do a little good to others. A morbid, insatiate desire to posess the earth, to grab everything in sight, is at the foundation of more misery than almost any one thing. Wealth alone will never keep your memory green after you are gone—a good life and kind actions will."

This precious fragment originated in the editorial fake-shop where politicians turn out grists redhot for the soothing of the distempered people. "Take a little comfort, while I draw your shirt off your back, and fit on a pair of wooden shoes!" "Don't try to be rich, like those poor suffering millionaries!" "Be poor and you'll be happy!" "Don't eat canned tomatoes—onions and fried pigtails are the source of all comfort!" "Don't let your boys get ambitious, either!" That's the tune of the above song.

A Peculiar Case.

Capital Journal, (Salem, Oregon).

A case of peculiar interest to our citizens in general, is now in the courts. It appears that a young German named Schlevoight held a five-years' lease on a farm of Geo. Collins', south of this city. Said lease was subject to the sale of the farm, and would terminate whenever the place was sold entire. It appears further that Bartlett & Catterlin, real estate agents of this city, had found purchasers for some small tracts of the farm, if it could be divided, and sold piecemeal. To this, however, Schlevoight, as a matter of course, objected, so Catterlin one day meanders out to the place and reports falsely that he has sold the farm entire, and that the poor German must sacrifice his interests and "git," Catterlin then says to Schlevoight that he will sell off his personal property for him. To this the German objected, saying that he could sell his effects himself, and this he does. Catterlin, however, figures in the matter in a questionable way and then claims a five per cent. commission, and upon Schlevoight refusing to pay the claim has him arrested as an absconding debtor, thinking he had no friends and would pay the fee rather than go to jail. The German gets bondsmen, however, appears in Justice Chase's court and successfuly resists the claim, it taking the jury but five minutes to decide in favor of Schlevoight. Catterlin now has filed notice of appeal to the circuit court, and the German says he will bring suit for damages against Catterlin and his bondsmen. The public await the final outcome of the trial, with much interest of course, hoping that such sharp practice as has been mentioned may be properly squelched.

The man referred to above is John Schlevoight, an honest German, who for several years was a resident of this city where he is very highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was married to a Miss Klinger whose mother and brothers now live here and are one of the leading German families in the county. That John would be guilty of doing anything crooked his friends here do not for a moment believe, and if he gets simple justice he will win the case.

Better Farming.

The Great West.

The toiling man sometimes gets weary, and folds the bedclothes about him, as he lies down to snore, sick and tired of contention. But what wearies him most of anything is to have a set of harpies harp their harps in his ear morn, noon and night, telling him what a miserable botch of a workman he is. Sometimes he is shiftless; sometimes he is a drinker; sometimes he is an ass; but all times the siren song pierces his vitals—"what an infernal poor farmer you are!"

"Low prices for wheat? Ah, that's because you'r a darn poor farmer."

"Combinations robbing you? Yes, but that's because you don't know how to shovel manure."

"Thirty per cent. interest on a mortgage? Certainly, if you knew a beet from a bootjack you wouldn't feel sixty per cent."

"Railroads take 20 cents to haul wheat 120 miles? Cert—gnaw bones closer and let your children wear no stockings and you can get rich on air!"

"Sugar too high?" Thunder, put your Trust in sawdust—and eat no sugar—millionaires are careful about expenses."

"Politicians stealing you blind?" Well, don't get into politics—work like a nigger—keep your wife and children had at it—and rest your financial salvation in letting me, a big-bug, and the lawyer, and the banker, manage politics. You can't raise corn and think "d—n" at the polls. We can do all that for you."

"Coal is $11.50? Of course it is. But better farming will bring it down. Keep your family at work and they won't need coal!"

Now we're sick of this. The most intelligent and magnificent farming in the history of the world is done to-day. There is most splendid breeding, wise forethought in regard to crops, and much machinery and journalism called in—and yet 500 farms around one little western town have passed into the hands of the mortgagees in five years! Let us have a rest.

American Sugar.

B. L. D., in Prairie Farmer.

In view of the fact that overproduction has sadly overtaken the great staple crops, it seems necessary for farmers to turn their attention towards a greater diversity of products. We need to produce less of what is needed. Sugar is regarded as an agricultural product. Last year about $75,000,000 worth of this article was imported. This enormous sum went to the farmers of other countries. It is worth while to notice that this was done, notwithstanding the heavy duty imposed upon sugar.

For many years the growth of sugar has been confined to the cane-growers of the south, but for several reasons they have failed to supply the demand. For fully one-third of a century experimenters have been trying to demonstrate that sugar can be extracted from sorghum. Their results have been so fruitless that many have regarded such a thing as impractical. The truth is, we have been so taken up with corn, wheat, cotton and live stock, that we have not considered the possibilities of other lines of production. The appliances for producing these staples have been so nearly perfected that it is easier and safer to limit our attention to these alone. And if the production of these great crops would only continue profitable, we would continue until the day of doom.

These days of depression do not mean death to American agriculture, but they should mean an expansion and accommodation to the needs of the country. There is every reason to believe that the domestic production of sugar will tend to this end. Are the objections that sugar cannot be profitably produced sufficiently strong to withstand the necessities of the case? We believe the sugar problem can be solved nearly every day. There must be something sadly wrong if a nation with as varied resources as ours cannot raise its own sugar, especially since nearly every other product fails to yield a considerable profit. We have plenty of cheap land, which is greatly in our favor. The wide extent of the country is calculated to grow the various sugar producing plants to advantage.

It is a fact that more beet sugar is produced than cane sugar. Beets can be grown in nearly all the northern states. The process of extracting the sugar has been perfected, and has been an established industry for years. What has been done elsewhere can be done here, as has been shown on a small scale. In California the estimated cost of refined sugar was five cents per pound. It is very probable that this cost could be somewhat lessened if the business could be carried on a large scale. Since we lack about a million lbs. of sugar each year there could be several large plants started without fear of overproduction. [It is the fact nevertheless, that everyone of the beet sugar companies ever established in the United States, save one in California, have failed.—Ed. Prairie Farmer.]

Whether sorghum will prove profitable sugar plant or not remains to be shown. This plant is susceptible of great improvement, as well as the process of extracting the sugar. This we believe, can be done. What is needed are a few intelligent, persevering men to undertake both, and not cease their work till it has been proven a success.

There is enough money in the production of sugar to warrant careful and extensive experimentation. We firmly believe that if farmers generally would manifest some interest in this matter, there are many competent persons who would devote their time to work out this problem. There must be first a definite demand, and this will be followed by the desired discovery or invention, as has been true in other departments of industry.

Raise Your Own Cows.

American Agriculturist.

A half dozen good cows are worth a dozen poor ones. It takes as much food and care to keep a poor cow as it does a good one, and while the former barely returns enough at most to "pay her way," the latter returns a comfortable profit to her owner. Those farmers who are looking around for really good cows know how difficult it is to buy one, when found, at a price they can afford to pay. Yet they frequently keep "looking around" for several years, when they might, in the same time, have raised several choice cows themselves. Of course it takes time to rear a good-sized herd of profitable cows, but this expenditure of time is only in lieu of the money expenditure absolutely necessary to purchase a desirable animal. As a farmer can usually spare the time better than he can spare the cash, it is easy to see what is the best course to pursue. There are but few farmers who do not now have at least one, two or three cows fairly good, which can be used as a start in improvement. Do not use a scrub bull merely because your neighbor happens to have him and charges nothing, but rather pay a fair price for a good, pure-bred one. Save all the heifer calves and carefully raise them. When they are about three years old, and less than four years from the time the improvement is started, you will have fine young cows. Other calves will also be coming in, from them as well as from the original cows, and in five or six years there will be quite a herd; the common, unprofitable cows having been worked off to the butcher. Many a farmer wishes he had commenced five or six years ago. He does not think that he will likely say the same thing five or six years hence, yet does not commence now. Good, pure-bred bulls have now become so well distributed, that the use of one can be secured without much difficulty, while a good bull calf can be had from such stock, eligible to entry, for a comparatively low price. Enough can, as a rule, be counted on from neighboring farmers' herds to pay for his keep.
